O'Malley's closed due to license

After liquor license expired Feb. 23, ABC denied renewal request for false information on accompanying lease.

A sign on O'Malley's Alley, a popular Aggleville bar, informed customers that the establishment would be closed temporarily for renovations. But officials from the Alcohol and Beverage Control division have said. otherwise.

O'Malley's liquor establishment license expired Feb. 23. All liquor establishments are required by state and city law to have a license in order to sell alcohol.

Scott Holeman, communications director of the Kansas Department of Revenue, said O'Malley's manager Terry Wark attempted to renew the application. But acting director of ABC Robert Longino sent Wark a letter Feb. 27 Informing him that his renewal request had been denied for several reasons.

The letter from Longino stated that information on a lease sent with the application was false.

The lease indicated that certain persons owned the building where your establishment would be," the letter said. "Unfortunately, ABC agents found evidence that the persons in the lease did not own this huilding.

The register of deeds confirmed the owner of record on the property, and it directly contradicted the information contained in the lease.

Statute 14-21-2 of Kansas law requires a copy of a written lease or proof of ownership of the premises with at least nine months agualning on the lease. The

Officials hope local numbers reach 50,000

By CRISTINA JANNEY Kansas State Collegian

The future of a city-university transportation plan is hanging on a number to be announced today.

If Manhattan reaches 50,000 in population it becomes an entitlement city, which means it is aranteed some federal and state funds. Now the city has to compete with other small towns for funding for certain projects.

We have to hit 50,000 or more if we are going to go forward with the plans we have now," said lake Worcester, student body president and member of the transportation committee.

The plan calls for a city transportation route, which would run two routes during the day and on weekends.

A SafeRide program also would be a part of the plan. Buses would go a certain distance from the route to take passengers to their doors on weekends.

City planners estimated $425,000 in federal and $150,000 in state funds could be available for the plan if Manhattan was an entitlement city, Worcester said.

About $350,000 was budgeted to come from student privilege fees, $260,000 from the city and $40,000 from non-student passengers. Students would ride free.

"I think if we don't hit 50,000, the city or students would not be willing to put up the dollar value," Worcester said.

Without the important federal and state funding, Worcester said he thinks the committee would recommend a Bramlage Coliseum shuttle, which would be aimed at only reducing congestion on campus.

The entitlement status could affect other future projects between the city and the university, said Ron Downey, associate provost/director of planning and analysis

Most social service funding is tied to population, he said. This could mean things like funding for low-income housing.

The census numbers could also affect state

4 American military personnel killed in accidental Middle East bombing

By ROBERT BURNS The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A U.S. Navy F/A-18 jet accidentally dropped a bomb on military personnel during a training exercise Monday at a bombing range in northern Kuwait, killing at least five people. including four Americans and one New Zealander, Pentagon officials said. Details were sketchy, and there was confusion among Pentagon officials over the number of deaths. Officials initially said it was five but then raised the figure to six before going back to five.

Two of the Americans killed were from the Army and two were from the Air Force, said one official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Brett Bartos, a consul at the New Zealand Embassy in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, told The Associated Press that a New Zealander was killed in the accident. He refused to give any other

Col. Ahmed al-Rahmani of the Kuwait Defense Ministry told Kuwait TV that six people were killed and some injured were in critical condition. He did not elaborate. A short time later, some Pentagon officials who previously had reported six fatalities said the correct number was five.

There was no official Pentagon announcement of the accident or the number killed and injured. Officials gathering details would discuss the matter only on condition of anonymity. One Pentagon official said an estimated 10 people were injured. A second official said no civilians were involved. President George W. Bush, traveling in Panama City, Fla., opened a speech on his budget proposals and military spending with brief mention of the accident in Kuwait.

"I'm reminded today of how dangerous service can be. We lost some servicemen today in Kuwait in a training accident." Bush said. "I hope you'll join me in moment of silence for those soldiers and their families. God Bless.'

Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman only would say that there had been a training accident and that there were an unspecified number of casualties.

The accident happened at the Udairi bombing range in Kuwait, about 28 miles from the Iraqi border. One official said those killed and injured were involved in a multinational training exercise in which ground forces direct strike aircraft to specific targets. It was not clear what went wrong Monday.

An official said the Navy plane, flying from the USS Harry S. Truman aircraft carrier in the Persian Gulf, dropped what was believed to be a 500-pound gravity bomb. The circumstances of the accident were not immediately clear.

The United States military has operated regularly from airfields and an Army base in Kuwait since the 1991 Gulf War, when a U.S.-led coalition expelled the occupying Iraqi army from the tiny Persian Gulf nation.

News of the weird

In San Francisco in January, a 33year-old woman was viciously attacked and killed by a neighbor couple's dog in the hallway outside her apartment, causing a furor in the city and temporarily running the state's electricity crisis off the front page. The neighbors, both lawyers, were revealed three days later to have adopted the 38-year-old man who gave them the dog, who is serving a life sentence at Pelican Bay prison and who was allegedly directing a dog-training business from his cell, supposedly to supply friendly dogs for companions and as models for his drawings. The prisoner-artist, Paul "Cornfed" Schneider, was also revealed (1) to be a member of the white-supremacist Aryan Brotherhood and (2), according to a San Francisco Chronicle report, to own several sexy photographs of one or both of his new parents.

Kansas House, Senate pass revised lottery bill

TOPEKA - A compromise bill extending the Kansas Lottery's life easily won House approval Monday and went to Gov. Bill Graves.

The vote was 93-28 on the compromise, which was drafted by a joint conference committee of three senators and three House members. The Senate approved it Thursday, 33-7.

It was the first significant piece of legislation sent to Graves this

The sticking point had been a proposal to use $4 million in lottery revenues to subsidize fares for flights into and from Kansas airports. The House included the plan in its version of the bill, but the Senate didn't even debate the idea.

That lack of debate stirred up enough opposition in the House to prevent passage last week of a compromise without the airfare plan. Some House members said they wanted senators to show them

Senators began work on a separate bill dealing with airfares, and opposition to the lottery bill diminished.

"I think it's time to move on," said Rep. Carlos Mayans, R-Wichita, author of the airfare proposal. "I just hope the Senate goes ahead and carries through."

The compromise bill would keep the lottery in operation until July I, 2008, six years past the July 1, 2002, expiration set in current law.

Supplies successfully linked to space station

SPACE CENTER, Houston -Astronauts on space shuttle Discovery successfully attached an Italian-made module filled with five tons of supplies to the international space station early Monday.

The module, called Leonardo, was raised from Discovery's payload bay late Sunday. Astronaut Andrew Thomas used the shuttle's robot arm to slowly hoist it to space station Alpha.

The process took somewhat longer than expected, slowed down in part by a delay in getting video from a station camera system the shuttle crew used to help attach the module.

"This crew is very deliberate. They make sure they get it exactly right, and we sure applaud that," NASA's lead flight director John Shannon said.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Peter Walsh said he will approve the bid in part because he feared TWA would be forced to liquidate its assets if the deal with American did not go through.

Bush scolds Democrats, touts tax plan in Florida

PANAMA CITY, Fla. President Bush scolded Florida Democrats who questioned the legitimacy of his election during his first presidential visit to the scene of last year's legal battle over the White House. "Americans want to move forward," he said Monday.

Amid talk on Capitol Hill that he will be forced into concessions on his tax cut legislation, Bush also defended the target juiciest to his opponents - his proposal to drop the income tax rate on the wealthiest Americans from 39.6 percent to 33 percent.

"I know that's created a lot of howling in Washington," Bush said. "... The whole notion of dropping the top rate is to stimulate growth in the small-business sector of America."

He urged Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce members here to contact their Washington representatives in support of the income tax bill that passed the House and most likely will be rewritten in the Senate.

Lenkner, Barker face off in last debate before election

BY SHANNON BURKDOLL Kansas State Collegian

Travis Lenkner, Mary Bosco, Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman debated Monday for the last time before Tuesday's run-off election.

Sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9, the debate began by recapping each campaign's platform issues. Candidates then answered questions from callers and the other candidates.

Barker, presidential candidate, and Kauffman, vice presidential candidate, discussed their main issues: expanding freshman orientation, enforcing the dead week policy, decreasing the amount of night classes and tests and informing students of rental

"If we give them their bill of rights," Barker said, "it will make them better renters."

Lenkner, presidential candidate, and Bosco, vice presidential candidate, introduced their main platform issues: expanded use of the Wildcat card, establishing a uniform wait list, improving the online university calendar and beginning a SafeRide program.

"Travis and I think safety is important," Bosco said. "And you should, too."

After the platform discussions, seven calls were taken.

One caller asked Barker and Kauffman how they planned to overcome the 300-vote deficit to their opponents. Barker said they have spoken with organizations and colleges and gotten their voters.

Another caller asked Lenkner and Bosco how they feel they represent K-State's diverse student body. Lenkner said he and Bosco are different, which helps represent diversity. They also are male and female, come from small and big towns and live on and off campus.

During the question-and-answer period, candidates were allowed to ask questions of one

Under the impression Barker wanted to eliminate the summer freshman orientation program, Lenkner asked Barker and Kauffman how they proposed to have a new program in place by August.

Kauffman said they are not proposing to eliminate the present summer day orientation - they want to expand it. He said it would be similar to open house, but only freshmen would attend. They want to give the freshmen a chance to see where they will live and what the facilities have to offer, Kauffman said.

"We think we're (K-State) doing a great job," Kauffman said. "We want them to expect more." Kauffman asked Lenkner and Bosco how the Wildcat Card usage expansion would benefit students and why students would use it more than a debit card.

Lenkner said the Wildcat Card would be a way of money management for students to use on campus. They want to start in small steps and build on the campus, he said, such as first using it for vending machines, copiers and laundry at the residential halls

The evening ended with final comments as to why candidates felt they were qualified.

Barker said he and Kauffman can represent the student body and have the knowledge to get . their goals accomplished.

"You are not doing your duty as a student if you don't vote for a student body representative," Barker said. "It starts with the student that votes. Bosco said students should expect more from their student leaders. She said actions should speak louder than words.

"We feel our qualifications enable us to make those changes," Lenkner said.

Local landlord faces 27 housing violations

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas State Collegian

Mike Lin, a Manhattan landlord who came under fire from tenants last fall for leasing an uninhabitable basement apartment to two K-State students, will appear in court today pending charges from the city of Manhattan. The hearing will be at 3 p.m. at Manhattan Municipal Court.

Lin is being taken to court on violating 27 counts of the Manhattan Housing Code. The focus of the trial will be the abandoned basement apartment, 1031 Kearney St., which was inspected by the city in September and declared uninhabitable. City prosecutor John Thurston said the main cause of the declaration was that the ceiling in the apartment was too low.

Upon further inspection, it was found that Lin continued to lease the east side of the apartment, which had been declared uninhabitable since 1992.

Residents Nisha Niar, graduate student in industrial engineering, and Kaushal Mehta, graduate student in economics, were ordered to vacate the premises immediately.

Thurston said, at this point, coming to an agreement is possible. and that the trial might not even be

"We might come to an agreement beforehand," he said. "I don't know what's going to happen, so I can't discuss the options right

Lin declined to comment on the trial and requested that all questions be directed to his attorney, Lawrence Vogel.

Possible base closings cause local concern

Kansas State Collegian

FORT RILEY, Kan. - The possibility of a new round of base closings has people who live near this northeastern Kansas Army post nervous about what might happen if it were shut down The closing of Fort Riley military base would affect a variety of areas at K-State - ranging from the ROTC department to student courses.

Maj. Art DeGroat, head of the ROTC department, said ROTC is a separate entity from Fort Riley and would be able to function if the base were to close. He said, though, that the proximity to Fort Riley makes it easier for the program to provide K-State students with the necessary programs and facilities - such as training courses.

"We are an autonomous organization, regardless of if there is a base nearby," he said. "If we didn't have that course at Fort Riley, then we have to construct one. A possible closing also could affect students.

K-State students now have the option of taking courses at Fort Riley. Ruth Stanley, K-State coordinator for Fort Riley, said average enrollment in the eight-week courses is around 450 students per session. That option would be gone if the base closes.

"If the base isn't here, then we can't offer the classes," Stanley said.

But the loss also would affect the entire state, not just nearby Manhattan and Junction City. The base is among the state's top employers, pumping $577 million annually into the economy.

"The closure of that base would certainly have a major economic impact on that region and the whole state. There are few industries that generate that kind of economic impact in the state," said John Fowler, president and chief executive officer of the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Fort Riley survived a round of base closings that began about 10 years ago. A new round for 2003 and 2005 has been proposed — though not passed - in the U.S. Senate.

More than 4,800 soldiers and civilians tied to the post live in

Junction City, said Ken Burgoon, military affairs egordinator for the function City Chamber of About 3,000 Fort Riley civilian employees and soldiers live in Manhattan, said John Armbried of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. A great deal of the post's $484-million payroll is spent in the town's businesses

The potential closure also would affect property values and the demand for real estate. Kelly Adams, broker owner of Coldwell Banker-Realty Group of Manhattan, said any large business would affect the area because the supply would be less.

"Sure it would affect real estate. just like it would effect the cardealers, appliance stores and movie theaters," Adams said.

But Fort Riley officials said it's unlikely the base would be shut "We're not nervous," base spokeswoman Christic Vanover said. "Congress has been supporting Fort Riley. Common sense would seem to show that if the government is putting millions of dollars into Fort 114 McCall Rd.

Riley, we're here to stay for quite a while.

Congress has spent millions of dollars to upgrade the post, including $40 million to improve harracks and $13 million to lay fiber optic lines. A $17-million upgrade to the post's railhead, where armored vehicles can quickly be loaded onto trains, was completed in 1996.

Further, the post sits on 100,000 acres, more than 70,000 of which are designated for maneuver training and war games. The only base in the country with more open room for training is the National Training Center in California. National Guard troops from surrounding states and as far away as South Dakota and North Carolina come to Fort Riley for training

The base also has an ally in Kansas Sen. Pat Roberts, a. Republican who sits on the Senate Armed Services Committee, which is considering the new base-closing bill. A spokeswoman said Roberts would oppose closing Fort Riley.

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

On the Topic: How can the United States prevent school violence?

Simple. Change a violent, materialistic society into a compassionate, peaceful society.

I think they should have some sort of system, like metal detectors, or something to prevent kids from even bringing guns to school. Or knives, for that matter.

How about mandated parenting classes? It's not the kid's fault, it's not the school's fault. Hello, people, it's the parents. These problems start at home.

A solution for the school violence in the U.S.A.: give those angry kids some pot. Then they won't come to school all pissed off and want to kill all of their classmates.

Tell all of the kids to wear bulletproof vests to school. That will prevent school violence.

The issue of U.S. school violence is not a problem with the students, it's a problem of the parents. Do you want to know the bottom line? Stupid people should not be breeding.

I've heard that in China to get rid of school violence they equip each teacher with a shotgun.

The perfect solution for preventing school violence is martial law.

It is physically impossible to stop school violence. You cannot control behavior, you can only control the results.

I hear you Christopher Piatt, complaining about black minority actors in Hollywood, but maybe you should look a little closer to home because there isn't that many minority actors in the KSU theater department either.

Yes, it's true, pedestrians do have the right of way. However, the next dorm rat that scatters out in front of my car without looking first is going to find themselves squashed.

Well, first the family section, the athletic department decided they were going to eliminate the family section for football tickets. Columnist gives college students tips, advice for enjoyable spring break

Traditionally, during this week, the Collegian prints its spring break safety piece. Such past Collegian safety tips have included wearing your safety belt and making sure you have a spare tire.

Well, we're all in college now and pretty much know how to be safe, even if we choose not to be

What Joe College really wants to know is how to have fun. College is the time in one's life when you can behave like a complete bonehead and rack it up later to youthful indiscretion.

So, in the spirit of youthful indiscretion, here are some driving tips for having a successful road trip to your spring break

1) Get the parents' credit card: Regardless of your true financial situation and spring break destination, tell your parents that you saved up a whole $72, and you're going to Cancun. No matter how much they plead or threaten, remain steadfast. They'll weaken and give you their credit card just in case of an emergency. Remember that emergencies include gasoline and beer. When your parents get the bill and see you really went skiing in Vail, they'll be so happy you didn't go to Cancun they won't give a flying rat's ass about the $6,000 in charges

2) Get the parents' vehicle: Next time you drive home, screw a bit with your car's timing. When the parents ask how you're getting to Cancun, tell them you're taking their vehicle. They'll give you their SUV.

3) Food: Spring break is only one week, and you don't want to squander any time at some McDonald's off of 1-70. Bring your own food. The food to bring should be easy to eat and not too messy.

and caviar stuffed mushroom caps (you are on vacation, so you might as well live it up).

Bad foods: sloppy joes,

4) Books on tape: You and your friends eventually will get sick of each others' music and conversation. A good book on tape will help pass hundreds of miles and keep your driving companions shut up.

Bad selections for road trips are popschlock (e.g. John Grisham, Tom Clancy) or anything too intellectual (e.g. Joseph Cambell, Friedrich Nietzsche).

Good selections are easy humor. I recommend Hunter S. Thompson's "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas." The book's "screw-all, give me some more drugs" attitude will put you in the proper selfdestructive spring break frame of mind.

And talking about self-destruction... 5) One must be extremely cautious about which drugs one takes while driving to your destination.

I'm not advocating doing drugs. In fact, 1 strongly advocate you don't. However, you kids seem to have a mind of your own, and it's better to be knowledgeable about the subject than not.

Bad and good drugs for a road trip: A) Heroine (Bad): If it's the good stuff, you throw-up, then pass out. It's very hard to drive while unconscious in a puddle of your own spew.

B) Cocaine (Bad): All

guerrillas continue their insurgency. These personal and intimate of secrets.

have been going around killing innocent men, women and children. So for politically correct reasons, boycott cocaine.

C) Ecstasy (Bad): Do you really want to spend nine-plus hours in a car trapped in the deepest rap session

Save the X for the ride home. By then you'll be close to killing your buddies, and you'll need the X just to survive the trip back to home

D) LSD (Bad): The fog of colors emanating out of the stereo speakers will obstruct your vision, and you won't be able see the alligators and giant bats that have come to attack the car.

E) Methamphetamine (not so bad): Spring break is only one week, and if it's going to take longer than a day to drive to where you're going, you don't want to be wasting any time or money stopping at a hotel. If the meth's really good, you won't have to waste any of your spring break asleep. You can always catch up on your slumber when you get back to class. Besides, it's good for the local Kansas economy.

F) Marijuana (not so bad): The following story is true:

When I was taking driver's education in high school, we were shown a movie on the effects of alcohol and marijuana on one's ability to drive.

Of course, the more alcohol the test subjects consumed the more traffic cones they hit, until the drivers were so blotto that they went spinning out of control and careening into a mini van full of children.

But the subjects that smoked pot actually drove safer. I swear to God, this is what the movie said. The only problem was that the subjects tended to miss their turns. So be careful, you may really end up in Cancun instead of Vail. G) Alcohol (passengers only): Drinking and driving will much increase the likelihood that you'll end up hitting all the traffic cones and go careening into a mini van full of children. In addition, no matter who drinks, you're going to have to stop. for someone to whiz every 10 minutes.

But if you're a passenger, hey, you are on spring break.

Distilled beverages are solely for the passengers. Perhaps they'll pass out and not bother anyone until the trip's over. Keep these drinks simple: rum and coke, gin and tonic, tequila shots ... nothing that requires a blender.

As far as beer is concerned, I recommend Micky's Big Mouth. The Big Mouth makes it easier to get the pee in the bottle and not on the car's rug.

> you can safely store the pee until your next stop. Play a trick on your friends by putting the bottles with the pee back into the cooler. Well, have a fun, if not safe, spring break, and I'll see ya if you get back. (If not, then there's just

Summer orientation already beneficial; change unneeded

For several years K-State has had an incredible summer orientation and enrollment program for incoming freshmen and transfer students. In its past 10 years, this program has received praise and commendation from thousands of students, faculty and

The issue of a new freshmen orientation has surfaced in this year's student body presidential elections, yet the current orientation and enrollment program far exceeds any proposed programs or changes.

In just three weeks of the summer, more than 3,500 new K-State students learn about life at the university - what their academic colleges are like, where to go for help or to get questions answered and what to expect when making the transition to college life at K-

They get the chance to get their Wildcat ID Cards; talk with current students and admissions representatives; learn about services at the university; meet with an adviser; enroll in fall classes; tour the residence halls; learn about fraternities and sororities; and understand what they can look forward to as a part of K-State.

Several universities have similar orientation programs, but none are comparable to K-State's. The effectiveness and importance of this program is immense. The events and processes involved have been refined to provide a premier program that introduces freshmen and transfer students to the opportunities available at K-State. Is this teally something we want to change? We certainly think not.

As former orientation and enrollment leaders we have seen firsthand the importance of this program to serve incoming students and make their transitions smoother. K-State's freshman retention rate is higher than the national average, and this quality program plays a large part in the success of first-year

Change for the sake of making change is never good, and in this instance it would be virtually impossible.

The proposed changes to the orientation program would affect every facet of campus, from facilities and housing to food service and academic advising and enrollment. In essence, the entire campus would be asked to change a program that already is successful.

While candidates have proposed changes to orientation and enrollment, they have provided no specific details. This program will cost students more and wreak havoc with university scheduling, but it does not increase the quality of a service already being

As K-State students, we all have benefited from successful freshman orientation. As former orientation leaders, we have seen the program's benefits. Voters should know the current program is a success that shouldn't be tampered with by student leaders.

Details of hazing accusation needed to stop speculation

Editor: In Wednesday's K-State Collegian, there was a letter criticizing the article written about the alleged Chi Omega hazing incident. As a former reporter for the Collegian, I understand how hard it is to get details on an incident such as this. I happen to be an author of one of the past hazing stories Wednesday's letter referred to.

I am going to assume that the reporter who wrote the Chi Omega article did his best to get details on the alleged hazing, just as I did when I wrote my story.

However, those details are not released to reporters. It is hard to get anyone to talk.

If people don't want speculation to be made about what happened, then release what happened. That will stop the speculation.

As for the comment made about the "ridiculous lack of content," the content was that there was an alleged hazing. Not only is this newsworthy, but it's front-page worthy. Although K-State's greek system is comprised of only 20 percent of the student body, it has a large presence on campus, so it or any of its members need to be held accountable. That's part of a newspaper's job.

Hazing is a serious allegation. It needs to be stopped. Even if it means ending something that is a tradition and wasn't meant to be hazing. If it makes someone do something they don't want to do or feel uncomfortable, it's hazing.

One last thing, I'm not writing this because I don't like the greek system. I'm actually an alumna of one of the sororities on campus. I've been on both sides.

The members of the greek system have to remember that any actions of one of its members reflects on the entire system, whether it be good or bad. Just as the actions of a K-Stater reflect on

Remember that next time. But let's hope there isn't a next time.

Engineers prepare for baja race

Kansas State Collegian

Tires spun, and the car took curves around orange cones in the parking lot of Bramlage Coliseum Monday afternoon.

The drive was a practice run for the College of Engineering's off-road mini baja car.

"We just want exposure and to let people know what we are doing," Kevin James, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "We want people to see what it takes."

The purpose of the test run was to get an idea about performance before the actual competition. The Mini Baja West competition will be April 26-28. This is K-State's third year to host the event at Milford Lake.

The test drive ended earlier than expected. Eliot Linsenmeyer, junior in animal science, steered the car away from the cones into the piles of snow nearby. The car died in the second spin through the snow, when Linsenmeyer jumped a snow pile.

James and Linsenmeyer said they guessed it stopped because a chain or sprocket possibly broke.

"This is not good," Linsenmeyer said. "My foot was not on the brakes. It was under because my legs are so long. Anything could have happened to make it stop like that.

The students use last year's car to compare with new ones. Two teams, consisting of about nine members, build two cars. Each team uses raw material and raises funds for their car.

"In August the design process started, and then they are finalized around Thanksgiving," James said.

The teams talk to companies to raise funds for donations.

"A big part of the project is the paper work and selling our presentation," Linsenmeyer said.

They are preparing for the annual Mini Baja West competition that will occur April 26-28 at Milford Lake.

The car is built to be an off-road vehicle at a low cost with easy maintenance for rough terrain.

"We have to consider safety and size, and there is a $3,000 cost limit per car," Richard Collins, senior in mechanical engineering, said.

One car this year differs by having a shorter frame, a redesigned front and both high and low suspension.

Team members used aluminum for the first time on the other car, and it is 35 pounds lighter.

The cars use a four- to five-point seat belt harness, which are the same types used in race cars.

"Our car is safer than driving a real car," Collins said. A careful decision is made in choosing the driver of the cars.

"It is usually the lightest person or the students on our team who have had driving experience with these type of vehicles," lames said.

The competition will consist of three days and three different events. The Static event consists of a design report, cost report and safety report.

This has the major points of all three," Collins said, "We are trying to sell the best car to a fictional company."

Dynamic events test the car's performance, and the third day is the actual race. So far, 100 cars from across the United States, Mexico and Canada have registered.

"About one-third finish." Collins said. "The race is four hours, so each team decides how to split time or laps among the drivers.

Linsenmeyer said the project is for fun. "Most of us on the teams are farm kids," he said. "We have worked with machinery, or if we are not farm kids, we have still grown up around cars and such."

Budget cuts might mean less student employees, reduced working hours

finding jobs on campus due to the campuswide hiring freeze and the Kansas Legislature's proposed $2.1 million K-State budget cut. Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services, said there will be employment opportunities on campus in the upcoming semesters, but not as much as in past semesters. Even though there has not been an immediate effect on student positions, Career and Employment Services is preparing for potential outcomes, she said.

"We're watching it closely to analyze how these budget cuts and recalls will affect campus student employment," Fraser said. "I don't want to sound premature, but there are many scenarios that could happen.

The K-State Student Union recently was forced to cut back student employees' hours because of budget difficulties. The decision came after the Union Governing Board voted to cut back on employee hours. Charlotte Self, human resource manager at the Union, said. "We don't like this part of our job," Self said. "We value all of our students that work here."

Self said there were some students who resigned from their positions and are looking for new jobs because of reduced hours.

Students who work for the Department of Housing and Dining will not have to worry about losing their jobs in the upcoming semesters, Bob Burgess, associate director of Housing and Dining Services, said.

Housing and Dining Services employees will not be affected by the budget cuts because the department is funded by the students who use the facilities. not the state of Kansas.

*Our employees will not be affected at all from the budget cuts," Burgess said. "We have pretty constant labor numbers, and we're going to stay consistent with the number of employees that we have."

Fraser said students looking for jobs might have to go off campus to find jobs. Employers within the Manhattan community are great job providers for students, she said.

"We have a program with Manhattan businesses called 'Put a Wildcat to Work," Fraser said. "Working off campus may not be a student's first option, but there may be no other options for some students.

Huskies, Vols take injuries into 1st round

The Associated Press

Defending champion Connecticut and Tennessee were seeded No. 1 in the NCAA women's basketball tournament Sunday, even though injuries leave some uncertainty over how far each can advance.

Connecticut (28-2) goes into the tournament with 11-straight victories but without its two first-team All-Americans from last season, Svetlana Abrosimova and Shea

Connecticut has won every game since Abrosimova went out, but Ralph's injury could complicate things for the Huskies in later rounds. Though not as gifted physically as Abrosimova, Ralph often set the tone for UConn with her gritty, determined play.

Tennessee, a No. I seed for the 13th time in the past 14 years, lost Tamika Catchings, twice a firstteam All-American, to a torn ACL in a win Jan. 15 over Mississippi State. Others took up the slack, and the Lady Vols (29-2) won 13 straight before losing to Vanderbilt in the SEC tournament semifinals.

The other No. 1 seeds went to Notre Dame and Duke, which edged Georgia for the final spot. Notre Dame (28-2), which shared the Big East regular-season title with UConn, and Duke (28-3) were seeded No. 1 for the first time. Notre Dame began the season with 23-straight victories and earned its first No. 1-ranking in history before losing by one point at Rutgers.

The first- and second-round games will be played on the home courts of the 16 highest-seeded teams with one exception. Iowa, seeded fourth in the Midwest, could not be at home because its arena will be used for the NCAA wrestling championships later this week.

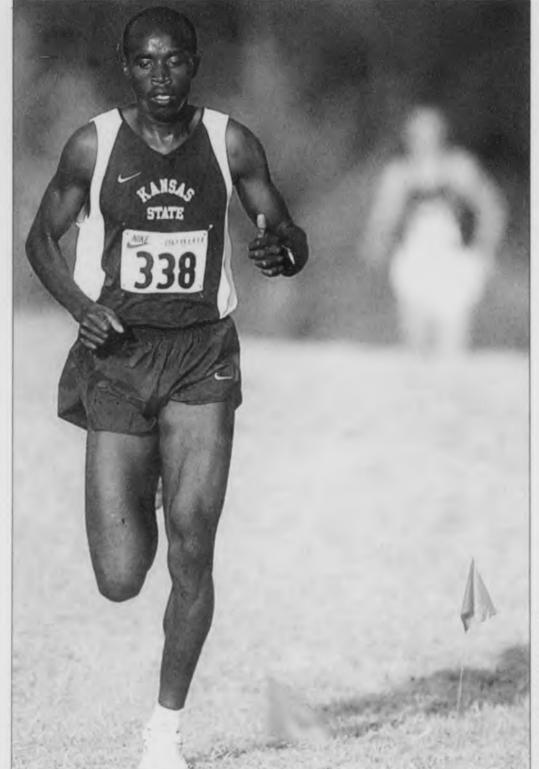

The Hawkeyes, winners of the Big Ten tournament, will play in a subregional at fifth-seeded Utah.

Both Texas and Arkansas got in after finishing with losing records in conference play. Texas was 7-9 in the Big 12; Arkansas went 6-8 in the SEC

The five highest-rated leagues - SEC, ACC, Big 12, Big Ten and Big East - accounted for nearly half the field with 29 teams.

The Big 12 led with seven teams: Iowa State, Oklahoma, Texas Tech, Baylor, Colorado, Missouri and Texas. The SEC and ACC each got six teams in the tournament. while the Big East and Big Ten have

The surprise of the field was Fairfield, which received an atlarge bid out of the Metro Atlantic Conference, a league that usually sends only its champion. Fairfield (25-5) lost to automatic qualifier Siena 70-68 in the conference tournament championship game.

Shadrack Kimeli runs in the Wildcats' only home cross country meet of the season in October at Warner Park. Kimeli placed fifth in the 3,000 meters at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships and ran the fourth-best time in K-State history by finishing the race in 8:07.98.

A learning experience

K-State sends 9 athletes to national tournament

By ERIKA SAUERWEIN Kansas State Collegian

State took nine athletes to the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships last weekend in Fayetteville, Ark. Although the Wildcats only scored in three events, head coach Cliff Royelio said the team didn't go into the meet shooting for a "Very few teams go into this type of meet with the thoughts of placing among the top three," Rovelto said. "There were times years ago when we were in the top 10. You don't qualify for the NCAAs as a team. Only individuals qualify. In our situation, we look for the kids to go out and have a good competition. UCLA won the women's championship for the second straight year with 53 points. K-State tied for 25th place with nine points, placing in two events. The men tied for 44th place. Louisiana State took the men's title, finishing with 34 points.

Rovelto said the overall results can be deceptive.

"Our expectations have grown so much," he said. 'It may appear to be ho-hum, but compared to others it really isn't. We just are starting to expect more."

The women's distance medley team finished third with a time of 11:12.9 seconds. The team of Amy Mortimer, Amanda Crouse, Nicole Grose and Korene Hinds ran the race in a season-best time. Behind Mortimer's fast start, Grose, Crouse and Hinds all ran personal best in their respective legs of the race. "We went into the race wanting to improve on our time," Mortimer said: "We had been running at 11:18, so we accomplished that. I felt pretty good and got into a good race. The race can get intimidating, but you just have to stick your nose in there and see what you can do."

Korene Hinds also placed for the women. She took sixth running the mile in 4:44.71 seconds. But Hinds said her finish was not what she hoped for.

"I went into the race to at least win it," she said. "I wanted to stay out of trouble, but I was bounced and tossed around by the other runners the entire race. At one point, I was pushed back into last place and had to catch up

The men's lone point-getter was junior Shadrack Kimeli: He placed fifth in the 3,000 meters and ran the fourth-best time in K-State history, finishing the race in 8:07.98. He is also the Wildcats' first men's All-American since 1999.

Shadrack's race was probably the best performance of the meet," Rovelto said. "He was a solid fourth place for most of the race and then fell back. But he fought back and ended up getting fifth. He ran very well."

Three K-State athletes competed but did not place. Rebekah Green entered the meet ranked No. 2 in the shot put event, but she failed to make the finals. She placed 10th, throwing 51 feet, 1/4 inches.

"It was disappointing for her not to place," Royelto said, "but what she threw in the trials would have won her any other meet this year. She was only four centimeters short of making Terresha Derossett placed 14th in the high jump with a mark of 5 feet, 9 3/4 inches. Terence Newman placed 15th out of 17 competitors in the 60 meter preliminaries running the dash in 6.77 seconds.

"Terence was a little flat," Rovelto said. "It was the effect of him doing both track and football. He had to fulfill his football obligations that week, and that's not workouts you do before going to a national meet. But he has juggled both sports very well this year."

The track team officially ended its indoor season and now is preparing for its upcoming outdoor meet at Emporia State on March 15. Rovelto said he is pleased with the indoor season.

"It was a good season for both the men and the women," he said. "We ended up fifth in the Power Rankings, we had good finishes at conference and we had a number of athletes go to nationals. It was a very successful year."

NCAA tourney selection committee minimizes role of small conferences

Wallpaper paste tastes like crap. And, if given the choice between drinking rancid milk or 7 UP, I'd have to choose the latter.

7 UP, part sponsor of the NCAA basketball tournament, uses a mock taste-test to pit its beverage against paste, bile and dishwater in a commercial.

Sure, we all have days when an ice-cold bottle of fresh chum just might be real competition against a can of Pepsi, but most days, choosing our liquid refreshment is a little easier.

Apparently, selecting which teams should fill out the NCAA basketball tournament is a task far more difficult.

It's not which teams on the so-called "bubble" did or did not make the cut that has me concerned. It's the selection committee's utter disregard of the midmajor and lower conferences that has spoiled the madness.

It's no surprise you can't spell NCAA without the AC in ACC.

CHRIS MCLEMORE

The Atlantic Coast Conference has six teams in the NCAA tournament; none lower than an eighth seed. In fact, the "hig six" conferences, the ACC, the Big Ten, the Pac-10, the Big 12, the Big East and the > Southeastern Conference, have 35 of the 65 available tournament berths.

Those berths include 29 of the 34 at-large spots. With 25 conferences being represented in the tournament, only 30 available entries are left for the 19 conferences not considered to be part of the elite six.

The automatic bid, the same tool that assures some small conference teams a spot in the tournament, is the same culprit that keeps so many small conference teams at home in March. The selection committee feels no obligation to these conferences because the conference champion gets an automatic bid.

Sure, most of the teams in the field of 65 rans against the Blue Devils.

that received at-large bids are worthy. Teams like North Carolina and Illinois deserve to be selected.

But consider the Big South's only entry, Winthrop, and the only team from the Southland Conference, Northwestern State, have to play a "play-in" game on Tuesday just to get into the tournament's field of 64. Even worse, the team that wins will have to face No. 1-seed Illinois in the first round.

Teams from the mid-major conferences rarely get seeded higher than 13. Most of the time, they aren't deserving of high seeds, but it should be no surprise when they exit the tournament just moments after it starts. The committee lets a few unheralded teams in, and then puts them in situations in which it is nearly impossible to succeed.

What happens when small conferences create great teams? The NCAA committee hands them a 16th seed, and the world watches as they flounder against Duke. It's no surprise. Half of the teams in the tournament would look like YMCA also-

The problem is that we reward midmajor conference success stories with a 40minute dance date with humility.

That's pathetic

The same forces that infected college football with an overzealous emphasis on strength of schedule have tainted college hoops as well. Who you play in your schedule is an important factor in deciding tournament admittance, but who you are able to play should be just as important. Mid-major conferences don't have the chance to play top-tier schedules and are punished by a selection committee with a misplaced focus on strength of schedule.

Teams like Richmond are ranked in the top 45 according to their RPI, and they were overlooked in favor of Missouri, Oklahoma State and Georgetown.

I'm not suggesting the Drexel Dragons should be given an invitation to the Big Dance just because of a nice smile and a cute mascot. But overhyped attention placed on whom can book the most top-50 teams ruins part of the fun.

Teams like Dayton, Gonzaga, St.

Bonaventure, Pepperdine and Butler have proven that the elite teams don't have a monopoly on tournament talent.

Unfortunately, the major conferences do have a near monopoly on tournament berths.

The only chance that the UTEP Miners will have to dance in March is when they do the "electric slide" after one too many half-price kamikazes.

The NCAA continues to minimize the role of mid-major conferences, and perpetually overlooks deserving mid-major teams.

These teams aren't just feel-good stories. They are teams with more talent than half the Big Ten, that get less respect than Aretha Franklin on a bad night. The selection committee's big conference bandwagon leaves a bad taste in the mouths of deserving small conference teams nationwide. Just like rancid milk.

Japanese art shown in Union

Sharp artwork, fast action and complicated stories mark the style of Japanese animation. Despite what some people might think, it's not just kids' stuff.

Only recently has mainstream American culture began to feel the force of the eye-catching style of Japanese anime, a medium that has been popular in Japan since the 1960s. Hideki Fields, K-State Animé and Manga Society president, said members hope the film festival the society is sponsoring will encourage interest in the style.

"We usually have 14 or 15 people show up to meetings," Fields, sophomore in civil engineering, said. "Part of the reason we have the film lestival every year is to get people interested in the society."

This is the third year for the festival, which began Sunday and continues each afternoon this week through Friday in Forum Hall. Fields said a variety of types of films will be shown throughout the festival to give viewers a good idea of the breadth of animé.

The festival is well-timed since March is Asian Awareness month, and the cartoons are a part of Japanese culture, said Steve True, creative chairman of the society. If people are interested in that culture, or just like animation. True, sophomore in electrical engineering, said they might enjoy the films shown.

"In a way, it opens people up to a different culture," he said. "Not a lot of people know about

"Perfect Blue," an animé film about a pop singer stalked by a murderer, opened the festival Sunday, which fit into the Sunday category of films. Each day has a specific category for what is shown, Fields said. Today's category is action.

Fields said those who become interested in joining the society, could go to Union Room 207, where anime is shown from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m every Sunday. If someone decides to become a member. True said it is $5 to join for students and $10 for nts, which goes towards buying an

The tradition of the Japanese animation began with the comic book that became an animated series in 1960, "Tetsuwan Atom," better known in version of the style can be seen every day on regular network programming such as "Pokémon" and "Dragon Ball Z. Part of the reason Japan relies more on animation is that film makers don't have the money to make the special effects-filled spectacles Hollywood produces, Fields said. Since many of the stunts and fight sequences would cost a great deal to produce in live action, it is more economical for artists to animate the complicated

The style of these videos has influenced other mediums, such as movies and video games. For instance, the fight sequences from "The Matrix" and "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" borrow from animé style, Fields said.

Fields said much of his interest in Japaneseanimation is stemmed from the fact that he was born in Japan, where he lived for his first seven Japanese culture through his studies. Fields is in his fourth semester of Japanese, and he said watching the films in their original language helps him assimilate the vocabulary.

Sometimes members will watch the animé without the subtitles, which makes them listen more closely to the language, Fields said. "It helps you learn the language because in class, the teachers speak slow so you can fearn, but watching something in Japanese you get many different dialects, and just hearing it makes you pick it up faster," he said.

BECKY WILSON / Collegian

It is common to see Japanese students show up at meetings, Fields said.

Most animé enthusiasts prefer subtitled videos instead of overdubbed English versions since many dubs change the meaning of what is said. and the original language fits the animation better, True said.

For this reason, DVD versions usually are preferred to video since the viewer can turn the sub-titles on and off.

John Mierau, secretary and Web master of the society, maintains the Web page, where information regarding the club's events and meetings can

Mierau said he joined the club after Fields, his roommate, joined and because he enjoyed the something out of the ordinary, this is it." he said. Japanese animé is just fun to watch, Fields

"It's a completely different style," he said. "Even though people think since it's a cartoon, it's for kids, it usually isn't. There's not always just a good guy bad guy story. It's good entertainment."

LOCAL TALENT

WHO: Erinn Thompson, sophomore in dance

Erinn Thompson is a member of the K-State Repertory Dance Company and will be performing with them at noon tomorrow in the Union Courtyard. Thompson, who has been dancing since the age of three, originally is from Topeka, where she trained at the Step Ahead Dance Studio throughout high school. Thompson said she enjoys dancing in front of an audience because she likes being able to express herself in a way that eludes literal interpretation.

With four dances to prepare for in SpringDance 2001,
Thompson said she has been busy rehearsing and she is excited about the show, which will be performed March 30 and 31. The K-State dance program has helped Thompson hone her ils, and she has been happy with her experience in the department so far, she said.

If you have a suggestion for an interesting person to profile in brief, contact the arts and entertainment editor at arts@spub.ksu.edu.

"I sort of fell into the program at K-State," she said. "The whole experience has been so mind-expanding with all the

U.S. Census numbers reveal Hispanic population on rise

By GENARO C. ARMAS The Associated Press

WASHINGTON D.C. - The number of Hispanics skyrocketed by roughly 58 percent over the last decade, drawing virtually even with non-Hispanic blacks as the nation's largest minority group, newly released government figures showed Monday.

The figures from the national head count showed there were 35,305,818 Hispanics in 2000, slightly fewer than the roughly 35,383,751 non-Hispanic blacks.

It further documented the changing complexion of America reflected in data released fast week. to several states.

And the American population grew even more complex.

The new data showed that 2.4 percent, or 6,826,228, of Americans identified themselves as members of more than one race.

The rapid change in diversity is "our big story," said John Long of the Census Bureau's Population

"Certainly within the last 40 or 50 years, there is probably more diversity now than ever before," said lorge del Pinal, chief of special population statistics at the Census Bureau.

The Hispanic population surged 57.9 percent since 1990, from 22.3 million to 35.3 million in 2000. America's non-Hispanic black population increased by as much as 21,1 percent, to 35.4 million, while the non-Hispanic Asian population grew by as much as 74.3 percent to

In the 2000 head count, people could identify themselves as members of any of 63 racial categories, up from only five categories in the previous census. Thus, direct comparisons between the two censuses are impossible.

Also, "Hispanic" is considered an ethnicity, not a race; people of Hispanic ethnicity can be of any race.

Asked to what degree the head count accounted for immigrants who are in the country illegally, del Pinal said officials make no attempt to ascertain the legal status of anybody.

The growth rate for America's white population, in contrast to that of minority groups, was much slower. The number of non-Hispanic whites increased by no more than 5.3 percent, to 198.2 million, the figures showed.

Despite all the choices available to census respondents, "The overwhelming majority of the U.S. population - roughly 98 percent reported only one race," said the Census Bureau's Claudette Bennett.

The national-level figures come at the start of a bectic period in which the Census Bureau must transmit detailed population data to all 50 states by April 1.

Governors and state legislative leaders will use the data to remap congressional, state and local legislative districts.

The numbers also are used to distribute more than $185 billion per year in federal money among the

However, the data officials will present a more elaborate picture of America because people responding to the 2000 census had far more options on how they could identify. themselves racially.

The 2.4 percent of all Americans in this census who said they were of more than race was on target with previous government estimates of how many people would take advantage of this first-time opportunity, Bennett said.

Respondents in 1990 could select from only one of five categories:

"white," "black," "American Indian, Eskimo or Aleutian," "Asian or Pacific Islander" and "some other race.'

The 2000 census gave people the option of choosing from one of 63 race options, including "white," "black or African-American," "American Indian and Alaska Native," "Asian," "Native Hawaiian and Other Pacific Islander" and 'some other race.'

The figures released on Monday confirmed forecasts of a growth in the Hispanic and Asian populations, which demographers said was spurred mainly by immigration.

For Instance, the Census Bureau estimated on Nov. I that there roughly were 32.8 million Hispanics.

That's 2.5 million fewer than reflected in the actual Census 2000 head count.

The official numbers reflect how many people lived in America on April 1, 2000.

Democrats contend the Census 2000 data could have accounted for even more people had the actual head count been statistically adjusted to protect against traditional undercounts of minorities, the poor and children.

The Census Bureau said there was a net national undercount of about 1.2 percent of the population. or 3.3 million people, down from 1.6 percent or 4 million people in 1990. Most of those involved in an undercount were minorities, officials have estimated.

Republicans who oppose adjusting the raw figures have called the 2000 head count the most accurate in history and have said that such an adjustment would inject even more errors into the representation.

Kansas is the only state that allows residents to claim residency some place other than where they now are living.

This mainly affects military and college students. For instance, a K-State student from Wichita could claim residency in Wichita and not Manhattan.

With growth comes added responsibility, said Eric Cattell, assistant director of city planning.

If the population of Manhattan and its immediate area exceeds 50,000, it would be required to organize a group to plan transportation projects in the area.

candidates at their personal gatherings," Petrik said. "It will also be posted on the election Web site soon after that."

The presidential race continued because none of the five tickets in the general election received 50 percent of the votes.

Lenkner, senior in print journalism and pre-law, and Bosco, senior in public relations, received 1,285, or 34.4 percent of the votes. Barker, junior in public relations and political science, and Kauffman, junior in political science, received 906, or 24.2 percent of the votes. The total votes cast were 3,704.

"I expect this is going to be a close race," Petrik said. "We have two very strong tickets who are working hard to get their opinions letter said O'Malley's did not meet the law.

"It appears that the material in the lease is false in that it states that certain persons are the owners of the property, when in fact, they are not," it said. "Providing false information to obtain a license is another reason to deny the application in this case.'

The letter also stated that the old licensee was facing an administrative charge of violating a Kansas state law that requires 30 percent of an establishment's gross proceeds to be from food sales.

Longino said in the letter that he has the authority to reject the license if it appears the new application is an attempt to avoid any possible action taken by the director against the former

"The old licensee cannot simply avoid legal responsibility for violating the 30-percent food requirement at the same location of your proposed establishment by leasing you premises which they do not appear to even own," the letter said.

ludith Crosby, customer service supervisor for the city of Manhattan, said O'Malley's, which has had a valid license since Feb. 23, 1998, cannot sell liquor in the city until its license is approved by the ARC

Crosby, whose office oversees licensing, said that establishment is required to renew its state and city liquor license every year. Both city and state licenses expire on the same date.

"They no longer have a valid city license, and it has not been renewed," Crosby said of O'Malley's. "We try to be proactive here, so we contacted them and asked them why they weren't renewing. And they told us they weren't renewing at that time." Wark said O'Malley's doesn't have a liquor license, but that the situation with the ABC is being resolved.

Wark said the bar will receive its license and reopen today or Wednesday. He said the bar has been renovating the floors and painting the bathrooms. "There was a problem with the paperwork, and it has been taken care of," he said. "That's all I have Holeman said that there are

BARKER, KAUFFMAN WIN

Despite 2nd-place finish in SGA elections, candidates win 62 percent of votes in runoff.

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman will take office as the new student body president and vice president March 29.

Barker, presidential candidate and Kauffman, vice presidential candidate, won the Student Governing Association runoff election with 1.481 votes, or 62 percent of the total votes. Lenkner and Bosco walked

"I think the endorsement of Hopper and Engel was what made the decision," said Dustin Petrik, Student Senate elections chair. "That's what I mainly attribute the win to.

An exhausted Kyle Barker looked long and hard at the hand-delivered election results before he faced the crowd gathered at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque on Tuesday. Then he made his announcement:

"We won."

Explosive cheers spread throughout the bar, signaling the level of support garnered by student body presidential candidate Barker and his running mate for student body vice president, Brandon Kauffman.

Final numbers yielded 1,481 votes for Barker/Kauffman and 904 for their opponents, Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco. Last Wednesday, Lenkner/Bosco led the race with 1,285 votes, and Barker/Kauffman trailed with Barker's response was one of relief.

"Wow. Well, I don't know - we didn't know what to think today," he said. "I think there were a lot of questions as to how dedicated we were to our issues. This vote total shows that we're for real."

Both candidates said they were thankful for the support from the student body. "We want to thank all of our supporters for getting out and voting," Kauffman said. "We made up almost 500 to 600 votes, and that's

Lenkner/Bosco fall short in Tuesday's election

Kansas State Collegian

Silence enveloped the 12th Street Pub as a crowd of Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco supporters waited anxiously for the announcement Tuesday.

Candidates Lenkner and Bosco carefully glanced at the tiny slip of paper that would determine their fates. After unfolding the paper, a telling look overcame the face of Lenkner, presidential candidate.

His face told supporters Lenkner and Bosco had fallen short in their bid for student body president and vice president.

After pausing, Lenkner addressed the "Sometimes it comes down to the fact that

The runoff was a turnaround from the general election when Lenkner/Bosco garnered 1,285 votes, and Barker/Kauffman had 906. In the runoff election, it was Barker/Kauffman who received 1,481 votes and Lenkner/Bosco who received 904.

Bosco, vice presidential candidate, said the campaigners worked hard to get the word out about voting in the past couple of days. Both campaigns, Lenkner said, fought battles going into the runoff. His campaign was trying to maintain the lead, while Barker/Kauffman were attempting to close

The gap was built on support of the "Expect More" platform issues.

Lenkner/Bosco's platform featured increasing use of the Wildcat ID card, implementing a SafeRide program, having uniform wait-lists and increasing awareness of campus and city events. Bosco said there is a possibility the Barker/Kauffman platform will adopt the Lenkner/Bosco platform.

Regardless, the issues will not be tops on the Student Senate agenda — something that discourages Sandra Brown, freshman in family life and community service.

"It's a big disappointment. They had a lot of issues that could really have helped our school," she said.

Census figures released; Manhattan not urbanized area

Kansas State Collegian

The 2000 Census results were released Tuesday, and figures indicate the city of Manhattan will not be designated as a federally urbanized area.

Census results listed the total population of Manhattan at 44,828. The figure needed to classify Manhattan as a federally urbanized area or entitlement city was a population of at least 50,000.

Over the next couple of weeks, the city will have to evaluate the effect of the census results and Manhattan's future.

Kristin Heuertz, deputy communications director for the MORE INFO? Census results can be accessed at the Census Bureau governor's office, said they received the census figures late Tuesday morning. "A number of programs will be affected at a regional, state and federal level. but we don't have that information right now," Heuertz said. Heuertz said more information would be available today.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said figures from the census did show an increase in the population.

"We did see an 18.9-percent increase and moved from the 11th largest population to ninth largest since 1990," Butler said.

Figures for Riley County saw a decrease, though, of 6.4 percent, Butler said.

"Manhattan showed a very large growth, but there was not so good news for the county," Butler said.

Butler said local signs, such as a decline in the last six years for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, should be taken into account for the decrease in county figures. As for the effect on Manhattan, Butler said many retailers and stores look at communities with high populations and decide to move into the community as a result. "We are very positive about recruiting businesses and companies, and over the next couple of weeks, we can really look at it (population)," Butler said.

Eric Cattell, assistant director of city foreplanning, said not meeting the 50,000 mark means Manhattan will have to compete for requests with other cities for community development block grants.

Federal funding also was a key part of the city's proposal for the transit system, which now will be affected.

"It will have impact when and how transit can be implemented," Cattell said.

Mayor Karen McCulloh, City Manager Ron Fehr and city commissioners were out of town and could not be reached for Transit committee to meet tonight to discuss future of transportation.

Kansas State Collegian

The city of Manhattan will have to re-examine its transportation plans after not meeting the 50,000 benchmark in the 2000 Census. Members of the transit steering committee will meet at 7 tonight to discuss what steps to take since Manhattan is not eligible for federal funding. Meeting the mark would have made the city eligible for entitlement funds that could have been used for a busing system.

Youth drug use rising in southwest parts of state

GARDEN CITY, Kan. - There's a trend of increased drug use among younger children in parts of southwest Kansas, according to some criminal justice officials here.

A voluntary statewide survey administered last year by Greenbush Education Center found that Finney County sixth-graders had smoked three times as much marijuana in a month as the state average

Eighth-graders smoked marijuana around 11 times in a month, compared to state results claiming only seven.

As for alcohol consumption during a month, sixth-graders said they drank an average of 15 times, with eighth-graders claiming 30 times

"More younger kids are abusing drugs. There's not been hundreds, but I've seen a few," Finney County Assistant Attorney Lois Malin said. "Now I'm seeing 11- and 12-yearolds, when before it was 14- and 15year-olds, so it kind of sticks out."

The trend has presented a problem for school districts, whose drug education programs are mostly targeted at middle school youth.

Olathe school teacher arrested in drug raid

OLATHE, Kan. - An Olathe science teacher was among those arrested in a weekend drug raid at an Overland Park hotel.

Geoffrey Patrick Folker, 39, was charged Saturday with possessing cocaine and not having a drug-tax stamp, both felonies.

Folker, an astronomy and biology teacher at Olathe East High School who has worked in the district for 13 years, was not at the school Monday.

Through his lawyer, Folker declined to discuss the charges.

Olathe School District officials would not discuss the situation, but said the usual policy in such a case would be to suspend the teacher with pay while they investigated.

Two Kansas City, Mo., residents also were charged in the weekend raid, Johna Danielle Brown, 25, was charged with possession with intent to sell a controlled substance, a felony. Darryl Lee Francis, 37, was charged with possessing marijuana, a misdemeanor.

Investigators said they believe Folker bought about an eighth of an ounce of cocaine for $300 to $350 and was walking out the door when deputies raided the hotel room Friday night.

Imports of animals from European Union banned

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Agriculture Department on Tuesday suspended all imports of animals and animal products, except hard cheeses, from the European Union after foot-and-mouth disease was found in France.

The ban would have the biggest impact on imports of pork from the Netherlands and Denmark. Imports of beef from the European Union already were banned because of mad cow disease

Travelers will be allowed to enter the United States with canned meat products as long as they are still sealed, officials said.

The United States suspended all meat and animal imports from Britain Feb. 21 and ordered stepped-

Now, travelers from the European Union also may be subject to additional scrutiny.

Foot-and-mouth disease is not harmful to humans, but it spreads so quickly that entire herds and flocks must be destroyed to prevent its spread. The virus can be spread by footwear and motor vehicles.

French officials said Tuesday that the disease was found in cattle on a farm that had earlier imported sheep from Britain.

Controversy surrounds local party site

By APRIL MIDDLETON

Kansas State Collegian

A Web site dedicated to K-State student party-goers is raising controversy and rebuttals from students.

The site, www.kstate underground.com, contains forums, party dates, columns and several other forms of entertainment. This part of the site is accessible to anyone. However, a part of the site which features pictures taken at parties is accessible only to members. Membership fees are $15 a month.

Richard Maxwell, senior in management information systems, said he started the site as a way to share party information. Maxwell attends parties, with his digital camera, and takes pictures to post on the site.

Maxwell said there are 460 people who have accounts on the site. There are 59 members who have paid their fees and have access to the extra features on the site, including the pictures.

Josh Hagg, sophomore in business, who uses the site, said there are many features that he enjoys. Hagg said he originally used the site to get party information. However, now he uses it for entertainment.

"It's just a really cool site. I've been using it since September of last year," Hagg said, "I'm a huge fan of the site. I think students would find it very entertaining."

Some who have used it, though, have voiced concerns about some of its features.

"I don't have a problem with anything but the pictures. I think that needs to stop," Jon Krasnoff. sophomore in print journalism and public relations, said. "The editorials and forums are fine. Students need another source of information, but the pictures just aren't

The party picture feature on the site is what some students are questioning.

"It seems like this site is violating people's right to have a good time without being photographed," Krasnoff said.

Paul Parsons, instructor of journalism and mass communication, said there is nothing automatically illegal about the pictures being posted on the site.

Parsons said the law states that the owner or possessor of property, in this case the renter, has the power to give consent to enter the property

He said that although a home is still a private place, anyone who enters is given implied consent to enter and take photos of anything the eye can see.

"This doesn't give you consent to go wherever you want to go,"

"I would advise that implied consent doesn't go beyond group areas. I wouldn't open doors or go beyond these open areas.

Maxwell said he always tells the tenants of the residence where he takes pictures that he will be using them on the site.

Nobody that lives in the houses has ever complained," Maxwell said. "They know what I'm Maxwell said any time people have complained to him about their picture being posted on the site he has removed it.

"I have always removed pictures that people have complained about," Maxwell said.

"I don't see a reason for complaints. I don't have to do that Parsons said he agreed that photos would not have to be removed upon request, but it is a good business decision.

"I would say that is an ethical decision rather than a legal one." Parsons said. "Even so, it is a wise decision to take photos down when the person pictured complains.

Another concern that has been raised about the site is that it is a commercial operation, since members pay a fee to have full access to the site

Krasnoff said he is worried that the site is making money off of people who aren't always aware their pictures are even posted.

Parsons said this is a matter of appropriations law. The law deals with using someone's likeness for commercial purposes without their consent.

"This is a bit more of a gray area, but my gut feeling is that he isn't violating individuals' rights to appropriation," Parsons said.

Parsons said that because there are so many pictures on the site, it doesn't seem like any one face has any significant commercial value.

Maxwell said that the site is just for fun and there are several people who use it for entertainment.

"I don't ask that everyone like what I do, but many people do," Maxwell said. "Anyone who doesn't like it doesn't have to use it.'

Landlord's trial date postponed; city seeks agreement

By JESSICA PITTS Kansas State Collegian

Agreements might be reached by the end of this week between Mike Lin, a Manhattan landlord who is accused of violating 27 counts of the Manhattan Housing Code, and the city of Manhattan.

Lin, who was scheduled to appear in court Tuesday, leased an uninhabitable basement apartment to two K-State students last fall.

"We decided to put a hold on the trial," John Thurston, city prosecutor, said. "Our hope is that we can reach some type of agreement by the conclusion of this week.

The focus of the negotiations will be the abandoned basement apartment, 1031 Kearney St., that was inspected by the city in September and declared uninhabitable. Following the inspection, Lin continued to lease the east side of the apartment, which had been uninhabitable since 1992,

The two residents of the basement apartment were then ordered to vacate the premises.

"Really none of the details of the negotiations can be discussed until the conclusion," Thurston said. "We want to put an end to it; It has been dragging on for a long time."

Census results disappointing for Manhattan uesday was a disappointing day for the city of Manhattan. Census results have indicated that there are 44,000 people living in the Little Apple.

If Manhattan would have reached the 50,000 mark, it would have become an entitlement city. This would have guaranteed some federal and state funds.

This has placed a tremendous setback on the future of the city-university transportation plan. This also puts a decline on making progress with the SafeRide program. In fact, it takes the students free ride, so to speak, and brings forth a new question in terms of where the financial means will come from.

In an interview with a Collegian reporter earlier this week, Jake Worcester, student body president and member of the transportation committee, spoke about what would happen if Manhattan didn't reach 50,000, in terms of transportation. Worcester said the committee would most likely recommend a Bramlage Coliseum shuttle which would help eliminate congestion on campus.

With the numbers not reaching 50,000, it has not only reduced the ultimate quality of living in this city, but it has hurt students. Despite these results, a cityuniversity transportation plan should still be developed.

Twelve years since the wall came down, an invisible barrier still exists between East and West Berlin. To the untrained eye, the only evidence exists in a maroon brick line zig-zagging through the

A brick line bisecting some roadways and sidewalks, tracing the path of the Iron Curtain that contained Cold War tensions. On my first day in Berlin, I learned from my friend Toby Nowozin the differences. Riding on the S-Bahn (surface railway), he casually pointed. "That's East Berlin," he noted as we swept passed station. I peered out of the window straining to see what made this station so different from the ones we had seen in West Berlin. Everything was written in German and four different colored recycling bins, color coded for the material recycled, stood at attention. "Look closely at the tiles on the wall, the color and shape,"

So I did. And by the end of my stay in Berlin, I felt experienced. I could look at nearly any building or station and tell if it was former East Berlin.

KORPENWELTEN (Body World)

Berliners from all directions flocked to see a new display at the Old Post Office. Combining art and science, this gruesome display of plasticized human bodies was the talk of the town. Each specimen had been pressure injected with a silicone-like substance shortly after dying, preserving the corpses.

All specimens were complete with reproductive organs, so I had a feeling I would never see the exhibit anywhere near conservative Kansas, I had to go.

Each specimen portrayed a different facet of the human body. One man was stripped only of skin to display the muscular system, while another was dissected to where only his neural pathways remained. A woman in the second trimester had been opened, > displaying the fetus frozen in time. The most sturning specimens were a man seated to play chess at a table and a man sliced in three parts atop a preserved horse. The horse was a veterinary wonder, some parts stripped of skin and tissue while the tail and eyes remained intact. My experience was not really what I expected. My mind said I simply wouldn't have jet lag, but my body had other ideas. I hadn't felt like eating all morning. My blood sugar dropped as we waited in line nearly an hour, standing in a stuffy, crowded room. By the time I paid to enter I was a little light headed.

The visuals of the exhibit were simply too powerful. I felt like I was in Human Body lab back at K-State. I felt myself slipping away.

I hurried over and sat against a wall, but the darkness still came. I passed out. My life flashed before my eyes. I saw the little white light and everything.

Then, I heard a torrent of German and some broken English. A nice tour operator gave me some straight sugar and I was on my way. I was off to see the last 200 meters of the Berlin Wall, standing now as a protected national monument.

Rights, responsibilities topic of student renters workshop

Editor,

All college students have different experiences and deal with a variety of issues. However, there is one common subject that almost every student either deals with now or will deal with in the near future. The one situation relevant to all students is renting.

Renting is a common and regular practice by all young adults away from home, but awareness of the rights and responsibility that renting brings with it are not well known. How can something so pertinent to us be overlooked? It is simple, as students we are pressed for time and we set priorities as to what is important in our daily lives.

Most of the time we do not place the knowledge of our rights and responsibilities as tenants very high on the list. We tend to be optimistic and trust landlords to deal with us in a fair and appropriate

There are many terrific and trustworthy landlords in Manhattan. Unfortunately, there are landlords out there who are not very moral who do not operate their business professionally and this is the one reason that all students even if you don't rent off-campus should attend the Consumer Awareness and Tenant Affairs Workshop.

The Union Pacific Council, along with the Consumer and Tenant Affairs Office, will be the hosts of the event at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Station to increase student awareness of their rights and responsibilities as a tenant.

There will be several speakers, including Dianne Urban, the student attorney; Larry Hackney, from the Human Resource office of Manhattan;

Brad Claussen, from the Code Enforcement Division, and Roger Luthi. the Small Landlord Association president. They will speak for a brief period of time on their respective services and how they can be utilized by students and then the floor will be open for questions to anyone who is present. At this time students will have the opportunity to have any questions answered and be able to learn what their rights are and get a better understanding of this applicable subject.

Deciding to rent off-campus in Manhattan rises thought on two decisions. What kind of living arrangement we want which includes all the choices characteristic of a rental unit. The second was mentioned above and that is the landlord, which includes the lease requirements and their business practices. These are very important decisions to make and require a great amount of time.

In our efforts to make this process easier for students, the Consumer and Tenant Affairs Office along with the K-State Collegian will hold the annual Apartment Fair this Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Union Courtyard. This is a great opportunity for students to meet many area landlords and property managers and discuss living arrangements for next year.

The Consumer Awareness and Tenant Affairs Workshop, along with the Apartment Fair, are both services that the Consumer and Tenant Affairs office provides along with many others.

The Consumer and Tenant Affairs is a free service located in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the ground floor if you have any questions or concerns about your rights as a tenant or a landlord please call and the OSAS and make an appointment to learn what your rights and responsibilities are.

The call was received at 11:27 a.m., Snyder said.

Before firefighters could arrive, Richard Martin, director of McCain, who was in another room. said he came out of the office after smelling the smoke and hearing the commotion outside.

Martin proceeded to put the fire out with a nearby extinguisher,

"I put the fire out, then opened the heater and turned off the switch," he said. "After that, I turned off the breaker.

When fire fighters arrived on the scene, Snyder said they disassembled the heater and inspected the scene to make sure there was no further damage or danger. Snyder said McCain employees did a good job handling the situation.

Though it is very rare that these types of wall heaters actually catch fire, Snyder said it is a concern as they get older.

Martin said he was glad there was no further damage

"There was very little damage and no injuries, and we're thankful for the quick response of the fire department," he said.

Convicted teen-age murderer transferred to juvenile center from prison

By TERRY SPENCER

The Associated Press

MIAMI - Lionel Tate, the 14year-old boy serving a life sentence for the murder of a 6-year-old family friend, now is in a juvenile prison, having been transferred three days after he entered an adult

Officials secretly moved Tate on Monday night, shifting him from the South Florida Reception Center near Miami to the maximum security Okeechobee Juvenile Offender Center about 100 miles to the north

He will be kept with 47 other boys convicted of violent crimes, said Catherine Arnold, a spokeswoman with the Department of Juvenile Justice.

After evaluation. Tate will be assigned an education program and mental health treatment. Arnold said. He will stay at Okeechobee for the foreseeable future unless he becomes violent or disruptive, in which case he would be sent back to adult prison, she lim Lewis, Tate's attorney, did not immediately return a call for comment Tuesday.

Tate received a mandatory life sentence Friday for the 1999 murder of Tiffany Eunick, for whom his mother was babysitting.

Tate said he accidentally killed the girl while imitating pro wrestlers, but a jury rejected that defense, convicting him of firstdegree murder. The girl suffered numerous injuries, including a skull fracture and a severed liver.

Before trial, prosecutors offered a plea bargain of three years in a juvenile prison, a year of house arrest and 10 years of probation. but the defense rejected the offer.

Lewis said Monday that a notice of appeal will be filed this week in addition to a request for clemency with the governor.

Janet Keels, coordinator for the Office of Executive Clemency in Tallahassee, said prisoners are not normally eligible for clemency until they have served two years, but Gov. Jeb Bush can waive that requirement and also order the request expedited

For clemency to be granted, the governor and at least three of the six independently elected members of the state Cabinet must agree.

Prosecutor Ken Padowitz has said he'll recommend Tate's sentence be shortened, but wouldn't say by how much.

Tiffany's mother, Deweese Eunick-Paul, told CBS's "The Early Show" on Tuesday that while she thinks three years would have been a light sentence, she doesn't oppose having Tate released eventually. She said it would "give Lionel a chance to at least try to get rehabilitated."

She disputed the defense claim that Tiffany's death was an

Wrestlers earn highest finish in 3-year history

Kansas State Collegian

The K-State wrestling team earned its highest finish in its three-year history this past weekend when it finished fifth in the NCWA National Tournament in Dallas, Three wrestlers took home national All-American status, giving K-State eight in the past three

Freshman Seth Lytle led the way with a second place finish at 149 pounds. Junior Marques Jackson, who walked on to the football team this winter as a free safety. finished third in the 197-pound bracket. Sophomore Jacob Eisenbise was fifth at 235

Second-year head coach Harold Jagerson and former Chapman High School coach said what allowed K-State to have so much success was that nearly every wrestler earned points for the team, even through the

"I thought going in that we could finish top five, but we're shooting for at least a top 10 mark in the end," he said. "Everyone was able to contribute to the team points, which doesn't always happen on the backside of the brackets. You usually can't count on a lot of points back there, but we were able to do it. When you do get the points on the backside. it's obviously great and helps out the team more than ever."

Lytle defeated three wrestlers in his 23man bracket en route to the finals, which tied the K-State record for the highest finish at nationals when Matt Holovach finished second in 1999.

"I thought Seth was capable of finishing that high," Jagerson said. "I don't think it was a surprise. He defeated some good wrestlers because he is a good wrestler."

The 180-pound Jackson, who wrestled up a weight class, defeated four opponents.

lagerson said what Jackson accomplished is hard to do when your opponents weigh so much more than you do.

"He was giving them quite a few pounds," he said. "He was able to use his quickness and strength to win what he did. If he could have been a little lucky down the stretch, he could have been right there. Sometimes things don't go right or a move slips. It's very hard to do what he did, no matter where he

Jackson, who wrestled at NJCAA National Champion Neosho County Community College the past two years, said the hardest thing about going through the football tryouts while still wrestling this season is the switch from the wrestling body to the football body. He said he knew going into Nationals that he would have to work out and use his speed to compete.

"The bigger guys wear down a lot faster when you go at them with your speed like I have," Jackson said. "I have to use my quickness and just try to control the match and keep it at my tempo."

K-State qualified 12 individuals, its most ever, and captured the Southwestern Conference Championship just two weeks earlier at the conference meet at K-State, Of the nine conference teams. K-State finished highest in the national tournament, including the University of Kansas, who finished 12th.

In fact, K-State finished highest among all teams that don't award scholarships and have paid coaches. K-State's budget this past season consisted of just $2,400, a far cry from that of the top four teams.

"It makes it hard to compete with some of those programs, but we can do it," Jagerson said. "If you have good wrestlers and are able to have regular practices, you can do it. It doesn't mean that we can beat them, but we can surely compete with them.

canceled this season due to unplayable conditions, but with temperatures expected to reach the high 50s this after noon, the Wildcats and Blue lays (5-5, 0-0) can expect good conditions at game time.

Head coach Mike Clark said the cold weather that has plagued the Manhattan area early this season has hurt his team's chances to get into a normal routine.

"Baseball is a game you have toplay," he said. "It's been the equivalent to a basketball team practicing without a court, that's what we're having to do when we practice inside. "These days off have been bad for us. We've played only two days in the last two weeks. We can't let the frustration get to us and give into the passiveness that inactivity can give you."

Inactivity wasn't a factor in practice this week, as the Cats were able to practice against live pitching and hitting at Frank Myers Field in three days of intrasquad scrimmages.

'Hopefully the time we've been able to spend outside these last couple of days has helped us to keep the game rhythm that we had hitting-wise in the Nebraska series," Clark said.

Remembering underdogs important in NCAA tourney

You can't fool me.

All you last-second NCAA basketball poolers out there whose brackets look like my freshman year College Algebra test aren't tricking any of us. The fact is, although eraser residue on your official copy of the $5 pool bracket makes it look like you've been pouring over the statistics, trying to find that edge - we all know that you are terrified.

"Of what?" you ask. Ahhh ... the Cinderella. Doo be doo be doo. It's pretty much a lock in any NCAA tournament that there will be at least one miracle team that makes it to the Sweet 16 or beyond, and this year will be no different. That's why they call it madness, baby.

We'll start with the 16 seeds don't pick them. I don't care if your bookie is ESPN's Andy Katz, and he says Alabama State has a good chance of knocking off Michigan State - it won't happen. In fact, it's never happened since there has been a 16 seed, and that's a pretty convincing statistic.

Next is the 15 seed, and that's where things get a little interesting.

Did anyone else watch that game in the Georgia Dome last weekend where some team from Chapel Hill got spanked by Duke? Hmmm. something tells me Princeton has a shot in that first-round matchup. This pick doesn't seem so odd, considering that the Tarheels are just 4-4 in their past eight ball games.

Like the games involving No. 1 seeds, there will be no upsets involving 14 seeds this year. This partly is because three of the four No. 3 seeds: Florida, Maryland and Boston College had a legitimate claim for a higher seed, and all are on a roll. Mississippi should have no problem dismissing Iona (what is a Gael anyway?) either.

Now comes the matchup where we've come to expect some of the best first-round games in the tournament. No. 4 versus No. 137 Yeah, and if you want to win that pool this year instead of just contributing to someone else's beer fund, you'll be looking at these match-ups the closest. The nation's longest winning streak, 18 games, belongs to the No. 13 seed in the East, Hofstra (previous mascot complaint taken back). The Pride, as they call themselves at Hofstra, will be battling a UCLA team that has had more trouble than KU in the first round of the NCAAs lately.

Teams earning No. 12 seedings include perennial bedbug Gonzaga. If fifth seeded Virginia falls asleep in the first round, expect Gonzaga to take a bite out of the Cavaliers.

Speaking of falling asleep, the South's No. 6, Texas, learned a lesson at the hands of Big 12 champion Oklahoma last weekend in Kansas City, Mo. Expect No. 11 Temple to be looking for every opportunity to steal an early momentum builder from the Longhorns.

Finally, my pick for the Cinderella team of the tournament - the Butler Bulldogs. The 10th seeded 'Dogs have a winnable matchup against seventh seeded Wake Forest in the first round, and if they can get by the Demon Deacons, Butler most likely would play an Arizona team that has a history of losing when it counts. Although they don't match up as far as talent is concerned, they might just have the heart to cut down the nets this year in Minneapolis.

OK, that probably won't happen, which leads me to my final point. Don't be stupid about that Cinderella

Michael Johnson planning to retire

HONG KONG - Michael Johnson plans to retire after this summer's Goodwill Games in Australia, ending a career in which he won five gold medals at the Olympics and nine at the world championships.

The 33-year-old runner previously has said this would be his last year competing. He said Tuesday he did not want to be an athlete who didn't leave when it was time.

The world record-holder at 200 and 400 meters said he still loves to run but he has achieved everything he ever wanted.

Telefund sets pledge record, continues success in Big 12

By NANCY HULL Kansas State Collegian

Resetting the KSU Telefund pledge record for the 22nd year in a row is something other Big 12 schools are amazed by, Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving, said.

Dowell said that when he attended a Big 12 fund-raising conference last week, he was aware K-State doesn't face the fund-raising challenges of other universities.

The KSU Foundation's annual Telefund is the only Big 12 calling fund-raiser conducted solely by volunteers. Most universities, Dowell said, spread out the fundraising throughout the year.

"We just have a great student turnout night after night," Dowell said, "The success rate is remarkable."

Irish singer performs

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

Residents of the Strong Complex are celebrating St. Patrick's Day in pure Irish style.

On Tuesday night, residents gathered in the basement of Putnam Hall to listen to the vocals of David Wood, a traditional Irish singer. Wood, senior in vocal performance, has played Irish music since high school.

He said he first became interested in Irish music after his mother did research and discovered his family had Irish blood in them.

"Knowing that my family is from Ireland makes the music mean a lot more," Wood said. "I like the fact that there is real heart in the music."

Wood said he learned most of the music he plays from people he met in Weston, Mo., where there is a large Irish community.

Wood taught himself to play eight instruments.

During Tuesday night's celebration, Wood played numerous instruments such as a whistle, a guitar, a bodfiran, a drum and shuttle pipes. He also sang an Irish song, "Wild Mountain Thyme," with his fiance, Caela Simmons, junior in history and political science.

"Tonight is a way to show people that you can have fun without alcohol," said Simmons, a resident assistant in Putnam Hall. "Not a lot of people here know a lot about traditional Irish music, and they are here to learn more."

Amy Burgardt, junior in social work, won a six pack of root beer after she answered "Ene" as the correct answer to the Gaelic word for Ireland.

"I'm Irish, and I'm enthusiastic about anything Irish." Burgardt said. "I love the sound of David playing, and he's so talented."

Jonas Stewart, senior in political science, said he was so impressed with Wood's vocaltalents that he asked him to sing at his wedding.

"Dave is very talented," Stewart said. "I'm proud of my Celtic roots, and going to things like this helps me explore my Irish and Scottish backgrounds."

Those who attended the festivities also had the opportunity to observe literature on Ireland. The night's goal was not only to have fun but also to learn more about Ireland. Simmons said. Making the most out of every holiday is why Loni Marietta, freshman in marketing and international business, said she decided to attend the celebration.

"Who doesn't like to be festive?" Marietta said. "My room has been decorated for every holiday so far."

Wood said he hopes traditional frish music will become more popular in the Manhattan area. He travels twice a month to a pub in Lawrence, where he said Irish music is more popular.

He said a lot of bar owners in Manhattan do not have Irish singers because they are unsure about the music.

"There is more spirit in Irish music than people know about," Wood said. "Sometimes people think only of leprechauns when they think of this music, but there is much more of a driving energy behind it."

Wood said he would like to continue playing Irish music, and he might have the opportunity with its growing popularity across the nation.

"If this leads me to people who will pay me, then so be it," he said. "Right now, it's a fun hobby and a good way to socialize."

Against Nebraska, the Cats banged out 12 hits but suffered from three errors in dropping their fifth Big. 12 game of the year to the No. 9 Huskers, 9-6. Senior designated hitter Josh Cavender extended his streak of reaching base safely to 14 games after collecting two base hits off of Nebraska starter Shane Komine. Still, the senior said he thinks maintaining the streak is not as important as establishing consistency as a team.

"I haven't really thought about it," Cavender said. "Actually, this is the first that I've heard of it, but it's a good thing because it means that I'm getting on base and doing the things that it takes to help the team."

Sophomore pitcher Kevin Melcher made his first career start against the Huskers. The Overland Park, Kan., native struck out four and allowed four earned runs in, in four innings of work for the Cats.

Another fresh face will be on the mound to start the Creighton game. Freshman Jared Brite (0-0, 0.00), who also punts for the K-State football team, will be on the mound against the Blue Jays in a game that could see several Wildcat pitchers.

"Brite's going to start, but that's going to be a divided-up game because of this weekend's conference series," Clark said. "He may go two or three innings, and we'll bring in some other guys behind him."

Clark's men have made their presence felt so far this season, something senior Kasey Weishaar said is important to the team's success down the road.

"They've been a big factor in our rotation. We're going to have to get them in and them some playing time so they're ready later in the season."

K-State plays Texas Tech this weekend at home with a first pitch at 2 p.m. Friday at Frank Myers Field, but Clark said his team is going into the Creighton matchup knowing how the Blue Jays feel about Big 12 opponents.

They went into their series against Oklahoma and swung the bats really well and won two games there. They'll be fired up. These are big games for them and they'll be ready to play."

It's cool to go with them for a couple rounds, but you've got to realize the sun shines on every bum some day.

Now that you know the underdogs with the best chance to make some noise in the tourney, it's time to sit back and look for that long shot to start its annual run towards the Final Four just to come up a bit short when it's supposed to.

Disorder puts Olajuwon on sideline

By MICHAEL GRACZYK

The Associated Press

HOUSTON - Hakeem Olajuwon. who led the Houston Rockets to a pair of NBA titles over a 17-year career and became the league's alltime shot blocker, is suffering from a blood condition that might have ended his stellar career with the

The Rockets announced Tuesday Olajuwon has a blood problem in a vein in the lower half of his left leg and will require medication that will keep him off the court for three to six months.

The fear is that taking a drug called coumadin, a blood thinner, could result in a more serious internal injury if he had hard contact while on the court.

Olajuwon's contract, which pays him $16.5 million this year, expires at the end of the season, but Rockets general manager Carroll Dawson refused to say Olajuwon had played his last game as a Rocket.

"The first thing is his health," he said. 'As you know, we don't ever close the door. If you look at the way he's played, I don't know what this condition is going to bring."

Rockets trainer Keith Jones said physicians could not identify the ailment with a name other than to describe it as a blood condition.

"They're not going to just go out and say it's a clot," he said. "But they're going to treat it that way. The condition he has, if it was a strain or bruise, he would play. But, being on coumadin, our doctors feel it's not the best thing for him to be on the

"If he had another traumatic injury, if he fell to the floor or got hit in the head or a good shot to the abdomen, it could cause some hemorrhaging.

Olajuwon, the top pick in the 1984 draft after a three-year career at the University of Houston, was the NBA's MVP in 1994, when he became the only player to win honors as MVP, defensive player of the year and MVP of the NBA Finals. He is the Rockets' all-time leader in nearly all categories, including games, points. free throws, rebounds, steals and minutes. Olajuwon, who was not present at a news conference late Tuesday, has played a key role in the Rockets' recent surge to playoff contention and did not play Sunday in a lastsecond loss at Phoenix.

He's averaged 11.3 points per game in 49 games this year, 7.3 rebounds and 1.55 blocks. But 10 days ago, he scored a season-high 27 points at Dallas and in a game last month had 20 rebounds against Washington. For his career, he has averaged 23 points and nearly 12 rebounds per game. In the playoffs, his average is almost 27 points and more than 11 rebounds.

Pilot had clearance to drop bombs that killed servicemen

By ROBERT BURNS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A U.S. serviceman at the scene of the accidental bombing in Kuwait cleared the F/A-18 Hornet pilot to release his bombs and then tried belatedly to abort the training strike, U.S. officials said Tuesday.

It appeared that two of three released bombs hit near the serviceman's observation post, Rear Adm. Craig Quigley said Tuesday. Quigley, speaking for the Pentagon, would not otherwise confirm the sequence of events.

Five American servicemen and a New Zealand Army major were killed in the bombing Monday; three Americans were seriously injured.

Air Force Staff Sgt. Jason M. Faley, a tactical air controller with the 19th Air Support Operations Squadron based at Fort Campbell, Ky., was identified as one of the dead. The four other Americans killed were members of the Army. They were identified Tuesday as Staff Sgt. Troy J, Westberg of Wisconsin, Staff Sgt. Richard N. Boudreau of Florida, Sgt. Phillip M. Freligh of Nevada and Spc. Jason D. Wildfong of West Virginia. Their home towns were not provided.

Acting Army Maj. John McNutt, 27, was identified as the New Zealander killed.

Many details remained unclear. But officials speaking on condition of anonymity Tuesday said the forward air controller gave the pilot clearance to launch his weapons and the three bombs were dropped.

It was not clear whether the controller was among those killed.

One of the seriously injured Americans was taken to a hospital in Germany; two others will also be flown there when they are able to travel, Quigley said. Officials said other Americans and Kuwaitis hurt in the bombing were treated and released at the scene.

Quigley said the accident happened in darkness, with nightvision goggles in use, but weather was not a problem.

"Tragically, they hit near the service members that were at an observation post on the range," he said of the bombs.

Quigley said the accident came near the scheduled end of a largescale training exercise, with 79 of 85 sorties completed. Three 500-pound bombs were released by the Navy plane, none laser-guided.

He said the bombs were very low tech without a navigational or selfguidance system.

Officials said the forward air controller told the pilot as his plane approached the target area, "Cleared, hot," an unambiguous instruction to release the plane's weapons. Suddenly realizing the mistake, the controller then said, "Abort, abort," but it was too late.

Quigley would not discuss those details. "Those are all perfectly valid issues for the investigation to look at." he said.

The Pentagon identified the Hornet pilot as Cmdr. David O. Zimmerman, who commands the VFA-37 Hornet squadron aboard the USS Harry S. Truman, on patrol in the Persian Gulf. The squadron is home based at Oceana Naval Air Station, Va.

Asked about the status of Zimmerman, Quigley said: "No one from the air wing flew today. That was across the board. I don't know if his flight status has changed."

Zimmerman, a native of Orange Park, Fla., has more than 3,000 Navy flying hours; his decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Air Medal, the Navy Commendation Medal and the Navy Achievement Medal.

At the White House, press secretary Ari Fleischer said the Defense Department has been in contact with the New Zealand government and "expressed the opinions of the government yesterday, informed them of the news."

A U.S. Embassy official in New Zealand sent a letter of condolence to the government, said National Security Council spokeswoman Mary Ellen Countryman.

The New Zealand government was pressing for answers in the death of McNutt, who was killed instantly.

"This was a live bomb basically dropped on observers, said Defense Minister Mark Burton. "It shouldn't happen and we all need to know precisely what went wrong."

Pentagon officials are scrambling to understand what went wrong in the training exercise.

The Hornet was participating in live-fire "close air support" for ground troops at the Udairi bombing range near the Iraqi border when it dropped explosive ordnance "on or near" an observation post, the U.S.

Central Command said.

An accident investigation board has been appointed and will arrive in Kuwait this week, the command said.

"We will work hard to take care of the families involved, and to find out how such an accident could occur,"

Defense Secretary Donald H.
Rumsfeld said.

It was the second major accident involving the U.S. Navy in a little more than a month. On Feb. 9, the submarine USS Greeneville struck a Japanese fisheries training vessel while surfacing near Hawaii, sinking the Japanese vessel and Jeaving nine dead, including four teenagers.

The accident happened at about 7 p.m. Monday in Kuwait, or 11 a.m. EST, about 28 miles from the Iraqi border, during a multinational training exercise in which ground forces direct strike aircraft to specific targets.

Phi Delts to build new house; construction to begin in June

By LYNNE HERMANSEN Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Phi Delta Theta fraternity will have a new house in Fall

"All our money has been donated. It takes a while to raise almost $3 million dollars through fund raising," Justin Zeh, house president and junior in construction science and management, said

"It is a long process."

Fraternity members live in the Acacia fraternity house because their old house on Sunset Avenue was sold to the Delta Chi fraternity in 1998.

The new house will be built at 2216 Claflin.

Steve Zilkie, senior planner on the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board, said the fraternity will have a building permit this May, and construction will start in "Late last winter, the fraternity proposed modifications for the house, so they needed to reapply," he said.

Alumni's original designs included an old stone house and garage that sit on the site. New plans have been made to demolish these structures.

Zilkie said the fraternity reapplied to the board in February.

"They have complied with everything. There are just many steps to follow to reach the end," he said.

"The board has approved every request and permit."

There was one important condition for the fraternity to receive approval from the board.

"Preliminary and final plans had to be made," Zilkie said. "The fraternity met this condition."

In May of 1998, the fraternity received land donated from G. Hall Ross, an alumni member.

The fraternity was originally going to renovate, but then decided to build a new $2.5 million home on the donated site

"Renovating the house was going to cost too much, and the alumni didn't think it was up to par for what they wanted for us," Zeh said.

"It was a good opportunity to sell it, so we took that option then.

The new two-story, 24,000 square foot house with 60 parking spaces, a basketball court, a sand volleyball court and a courtyard area will be able to house 56 members.

There are now 35 members. "We are excited about filling the new house," Zeh said.

"Rush has been going really well. It has still been easy to attract new members. Zeh said the new house is updated for the future and accessible for the disabled. He said they are fortunate to have a nicer facility. "We are a dry house, so there aren't any worries of huge parties destroying the new house," he

Top retailers to slow growth

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - With consumers on a spending diet for the past six months, the nation's top merchants are tightening their belts in what some analysts predict could be the leanest times since the early 1990s.

That means cutting back on expansion plans, closing stores, and selling or shutting down unprofitable divisions. Some retailers are even delaying shipment of some of their spring merchandise by up to four weeks.

The sluggish retail environment helped seal the fate of two prominent but struggling retailers - Braintree, Mass.-based Bradlees Inc. and Montgomery Ward, the 128-year-old Chicago merchandiser owned by General Electric Co. And analysts expect there are more failures to come.

"This is another round of Darwin economics. It's survival of the fittest," said Arnold Aronson, managing director of retail strategies at Kurt Salmon Associates, a New York-based consulting firm.

"The economic downturn is taking momentum out of the mediocre retail players," said Richard Schaeffer, managing director of retail and consumer products practice at Ernst & Young Capital Advisors.

The bright splashes of paint that cover lanie Miller's enormous canvases are more than just random colors. To those who know Miller, they are a mirror reflecting her personality.

Miller, senior in fine arts, said she feels her art is valid simply because it describes who she is.

"This is a complete investment of myself," she said. "It is a representation of who I am."

Miller's exhibition will be on display in the Willard art gallery until Friday. Miller said this is her

I pretty much knew I wanted to work with art since the seventh grade," she said.

Miller said she has grown tremendously since she

"My art has progressed from experimenting with basic figures to nonobjective abstract form," she said.

At 108 inches by 144 inches, "Jigsaw Self-Indulgence" stands tall with vibrant and attractive colors created with acrylics on canvas. Miller describes her art as colorful, visual and having meaning behind it.

"My favorite pieces are the large non-objective paintings," she said. "They are extremely colorful and I feel something from them."

Winston Branch, associate professor of art, said he is proud of the accomplishments that Miller has

"She is an outstanding student," he said. "She is very conscientious and takes her art seriously."

Branch has been teaching Miller for more than a

"I have showed her possibilities that were available for her to choose," he said. "She explored the pictorial surface on the canvas, which allowed her to find her inner voice."

Branch said he hopes Miller will continue to porsue her work.

"I want to see her continue to progress, and that's all I can hope for," he said. "She has demonstrated a tenacious quality in wanting to be a painter.

Miller also has full support from her friends. Chris Schiffelbein, senior in fine arts, said her work shows people her personality.

"Her art is very much a part of her," he said. "It shows her love of life and people. I have seen more art in this room that has said a lot less then her work Katie Hurt, graduate student in cultural studies, said Miller's art has an effect on her.

"You can read into your own depth from hers," she said. "She builds on a red and leads into a blue, You can see what you want."

Miller's friends also have seen changes in her as well as her artwork.

"This has helped illustrate and open her personality," Schiffelbein said. "She visually expresses her emotions.

"Jigsaw Self-Indulgence, 2001" by Janie E. Miller is on display in the Willard Art Gallery. The painting measures 108 Inches by 144 Inches.

Hurt said she agrees that Miller has shown changes. "She has found a part of herself," she said. "It is something that makes her proud."

Traveling exhibit to highlight different cultures

By JENNIFER L. SHERRY Kansas State Collegian

The war-torn areas of Eritrea and Ethiopia served as an influence for the vibrant works in Betty LaDuke's touring

"While in Eritrea, I witnessed the people dealing with a lot of grief over lost ones," LaDuke said.

The new exhibit of brightly colored paintings covering the Union art gallery show LaDuke's compassion for global suffering. This American artist has dedicated the past 29 years to traveling to Third World countries, learning about the various cultures, she said. LaDuke's travels included 14 out of 52 African nations.

LaDuke said her inspiration for this traveling exhibit came from an intensive study beginning in 1994 in Eritrea. a small African nation. Eritrea had been host to a war with Ethiopia that ended in 1991

"I was really taken by how much hope the people had for peace, and I incorporated that positive sense of community into my paintings," LaDuke

The Union art gallery displayed one of LaDuke's previous exhibits three Andrea Harms, Union Program Council Arts Committee chair, was key in planning LaDuke's return to the Union art gallery.

"When we showed her work before, the student body responded really positively because, I think, it is so diverse and different." Harms, sophomore in interior architecture, said.

LaDuke said she mainly focused on the women and their daily survival skills in Eritrea, showing how the land is such a vital part of their lives.

"I was very influenced by the work they did with their hands," LaDuke said. "I love the women's basketmaking, and in some of my works, I used the roundness of the baskets to signify their journey of hope." Since her first visit to Eritrea in 1986, LaDuke has published two books and a video and has compiled five exhibits comprising more than 100 paintings.

"I'm hoping that my work will give a good interpretation of their reality, with dignity and respect," LaDuke said.

Lisa Riecker, senior in geography. said the meanings of the paintings stemmed her curiosity.

"They are so appealing to look at. but I think, also, there is more going on and they are telling a big story," Riecker

LaDuke said the reoccurring birds in her paintings are a symbol she uses for the human spirit.

"The birds represent the women's hopes and dreams. I also included cowrie shells in some because they are a prominent sign of fertility and protection." LaDuke said.

When selecting exhibits to display in the Union art gallery, Harms said they want multicultural art, and LaDuke fits that description.

"Her paintings are moving because they are created by a white woman who has interacted so passionately with these ethnic tribes, and her understanding of that shows in each picture."

Dance chapter might form

By ALYSON RALETZ Kansas State Collegian

A national dance association is seeking assistance from the Manhattan area to start a local chapter.

"We have a network across the country, and as far as we're concerned, the more the better," Mary Schaufert, the central office manager, said. "We have tried to start a chapter in Manhattan before, but there has been no response, so we are trying again."

The U.S. Amateur Ballroom Dancers Association is a non-profit organization that has been granted recognition by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

It has been around since 1965 and has more than 140 chapters scattered across the nation.

Schaufert said the organization has one chapter in Kansas that serves the Kansas City, Kan., and Kansas City, Mo., area. The University of Kansas Ballroom Dance Club is affiliated with the organization, but it is an affiliate of its Youth College Network.

Bogdan Pathak, president of the KU Ballroom Dance Club, said there aren't many chapters in Kansas because there isn't as much interest in ballroom dancing in this Involvement with the group allows members to keep in touch with eastern coast ballroom dance competitions and other information not available in Kansas.

Schaufert said the organization differs from the average dance club because it offers more than socials.

"It is much more focused on public outreach with high schools and nursing homes," she said. "We like to educate the public on the health benefits of dancing. Once the organization moves in, it likes to work with local schools and universities and start a more intense ballroom dance curriculum.

Pathak said being an affiliate offers members certain discounts, a monthly flier and various other perks, but she said being able to compete is the greatest benefit.

"In order to compete in national ballroom dance competitions sponsored by USABDA you have to become a member," Pathak said. "If you plan to compete, and if you would like to stay abreast of ballroom dance information, it is good to be an affiliate.'

He said if social dancing is the primary interest, being an affiliate is not important - especially since there has been some start-up efforts in Topeka.

Nate Kettle, senior in geography.

has been a member of the K-State Ballroom and Dance Club for three years and has been an assistant swing-dance instructor for two years. He said there has not been much effort to educate the Manhattan community on the organization.

"I would support the organization, especially if it supports health through dance, but I really think there is too much of a lack of information for me to put a stamp on it right now," Kettle said.

He said if community members show an interest, the organization should start a Manhattan chapter. If they don't show an interest, it's not a necessity.

"Students, however, have several opportunities through the club and classes offered through the university," he said. "The organization is not necessary on campus.

Schaufert said that if K-State students or members of the community are interested in helping to start a chapter, they can call (800) 447-9047 for more infor-

"So far we have received several phone calls from the area, but we are going to wait a few more weeks to see if there is more interest before we make the decision to start a new chapter," she said.

Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman address the crowd at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque after winning the student body presidential election.

Barker/Kauffman's campaign manager, said the hard work contributed by supporters was beneficial.

"We have worked extremely hard at this, and we've been the underdog the whole time," she said. "We really think Kyle and Brandon are breaking the mold here. People are excited about something new and different."

Ali Karimi, a defeated student body presidential candidate from Wednesday's election, came to Pat's to support Barker and Kauffman.

"If Barker got elected, my goals would be a lot easier to achieve," he said. "It doesn't seem like Lenkner thinks the other issues are valid."

Todd Kohman, junior in operations management and marketing, said he is confident in Barker and Kauffman's abilities

"I'm really proud of them both. I feel they represent the student body best out of all the candidates," he said. "It's a good day for K-State students.

Barker said he is excited about their victory. Barker said the pair already has decided which issues to

"We're going to take a lot from the other campaigns," he said. "I hope Travis and Mary will let us use their SafeRide program. We've said from the beginning how much we need that program here at K-State."

He said freshman orientation will be his and Kauffman's first goal. The pair plan to have the first initial phase of the program in place at the beginning of the fall semester. Barker said he wants to show the student body that he and Kauffman will follow through with their platform issues.

"A lot of our critics don't think we're serious, but we're going to prove them wrong," he said.

Student Body President Jake Worcester said he is happy for Barker and Kauffman.

"They are good people, and they ran a good campaign," he said. "I'm excited about working with them. I want them to know that I'm here to help them out in anyway I can."

Student Body Vice President Dana Pracht said the numbers from the runoff were a result of added support from Wednesday's defeated candi-

"As far as results, I knew it would be really close, but I had no prediction as to what would happen," she said. "I think that the results and numbers came from support from others who ran in the election."

After the excitement began to subside at Pat's, students broke off into individual tables to discuss the afternoon's events. Barker spoke of his and Kauffman's desire to work for the students of K-State.

"You start here as a student, and you get involved in a few organizations," he said. "You see the importance an individual student can have on the university, and it becomes addictive to help students. It's so important for students to know that they have a voice and what they say

"I think definitely the accessibility to voting makes more people inclined to do so," she said. "These results show students are interested in what's going on, on campus." Pracht also said she agreed with Petrik and Worcester that having the support from other candidates helped Barker and Kauffman win the runoff.

Worcester said after all is said and done, he was impressed with both tickets.

"It was a good battle," he said. "Travis and Mary ran a good campaign, and I'm happy for Kyle and Brandon."

"I think they were two qualified individuals to represent us. and it's kind of disappointing that they didn't get the opportunity." Wolters said.

Still, Lenkner said appearing to voters as something more than the status quo was a challenge for the campaign.

"We faced an uphill battle from the start trying to convince people that experience is not a dirty word," he said, "but that it is a necessary part of the job.

Lenkner said he is unsure of what he will do now, but said he likely will use spring break to reevaluate things.

"It very much affects the way we look at the transportation issue," Student Body President Jake Worcester said. "We were hoping to have those federal funds.'

The federal funding would have been available for a variety of programs, said Jason Hilgers, redevelopment coordinator for the city of Manhattan.

They also would have gone to programs such as HUD, which is a housing program that works to redevelop urban areas.

The need for a transportation system in Manhattan has been an issue with the city and K-State for the past few years.

Several plans were proposed and were estimated to cost $1.49 million for the first year of operation.

In the proposal made before City Commission, buses would run every 30 minutes between 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. weekdays on the two primary routes, and 60 minutes for all other routes, days and times. In addition, an Aggieville Special was proposed that would move in and out of Aggieville on weekends.

They were developed to try to eliminate parking problems on campus and in the city.

The proposals depended greatly upon the census results, so now it is unsure what will happen to the plans. Worcester said he hoped the city would have hit the 50,000 mark. Not hitting the mark will affect the plan.

"The funds may be there from somewhere else - I don't know," Worcester said. "We are going to have a committee meeting tomorrow, and I am sure this will

Liquor tax being reviewed by Legislature

Kansas State Collegian

To raise revenue, Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, has proposed a bill to raise cigarette and beer taxes in Kansas that would generate $84 million for educational

"This is a dual approach to lower consumption and increase revenue," said Don Brown, Gov. Bill Graves' communications director

He said the purpose of this tax is to generate revenue for educational use.

"The No. 1 sales revenue in the state is on beer," Barnett said. "In history, beer has a had a lower tax rate than spirits and wine because beer was the beverage of moderation. It was less harmful, but now beer is linked with the highest risk factors. Studies have shown that a slight increase in alcohol tax increases graduation rates and decreases violence.

The bill, Senate Bill 312, was introduced at a hearing Feb. 27. The bill now is in the Senate Assessment Tax Committee. Rep. Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan, said it still is on the Senate side and has not been sent to the House of Representatives.

"From what I have heard, parents are very supportive of the tax," Peterson said, "I have even heard from university students who are in favor of the tax. It would enhance funding. It is definitely something appropriate to look at.'

The proposed bill would increase the cost of a six-pack of beer by 50 cents, Barnett

"The cost to society of alcohol consumption is great," Barnett said, "In the age group of 18 to 25, alcohol is the leading cause of death. Forty percent of all crime was committed under the influence of drugs or alcohol. Seven out of 10 children are neglected because of alcohol. This is a huge issue. I see it as a fairness tax.'

Barnett said that to pay for the entire social cost of youth alcohol consumption, a tax increase of $5.61 would be needed. So. raising the tax on beer by 50 cents - instead of $5.61 - is not asking too much, he said.

"Fifty cents is nothing," he said. "This is a step in the right direction. Some say if you raise the tax, people will drink less-by-less and, in the long run, lose money. For that to happen, the consumption rate would have to decrease 82 percent. Do you think that is going to happen?"

Peterson said the tax will affect more than just retail liquor store owners.

"This would affect the distributors, too," he said. "Bars and grills will also be affected. There is a broader group opposed to it, but I think an increased-alcohol tax would be better than a general sales-tax increase."

Barnett said the proposed tax would raise about $61 million. He also has proposed a cigarette tax, which he said would create $23 million.

"The money from the liquor tax would go to education K-12," he said, "and five million dollars of it would go to tuition relief to stabilize increases. I graduated from college with no debt. Not too many can do that now. This would help.'

Chad Loman, owner of Nespor Wine and Spirits, said he has spoken with state representatives because he opposes the bill.

"I have contacted them and sent letters letting them know how I feel," he said. "I have done everything I can short of protesting, and some liquor store owners have already done that.

Loman said he thinks liquor store owners will suffer if the bill passes.

"Initially, it will hurt," Loman said. "With the student population in Manhattan, drinking is a constant - parties will always be going on. Students will come in and see a case of beer is $4 more and think we are gauging prices, when really it would only be a tax increase. Eventually, they will come around."

Loman said he thinks smaller communities without a student population like Manhattan would be greatly hurt by the tax

"In the larger picture, it will hurt the smaller communities and border cities like Kansas City." he said. "People will go to a different state to get cheaper alcohol."

Bill McCarthy, manager of Candlewood Retail Liquor, said he thinks the proposed tax is too much.

"That much of a tax would be way out of line," he said. "Those who buy the product will keep buying it, but they may scale down. A Budweiser drinker may have to buy Old Milwaukee because of the higher price."

Barnett said he thinks it was time for an alcohol tax increase.

"This is the right thing to do," he said. "Tax on alcohol has not been increased since 1977. What other tax do you know that has not been raised since then?"

The transformation game is just one of the exercises Kate Anderson has her Fundamentals of Improvisation class, an introductory improvisation course, work on throughout the semester to improve acting techniques.

"The class is a structured technique to learn how to work with improvisation." Anderson said.

"Certainly, in one course you can't take a class and make them masters, but instead they learn how to take improvisation to the next level.

The class, which meets in the Purple Masque Theatre on Tuesdays and Thursdays, is open to all K-State students, not just theater majors. She said students choose to take the class for a variety of reasons.

"Some students want to work on their spontaneity or their focus through concentration," she said. "Others use it as a theater technique." She said that at first, some students are unsure about taking the improvisation class.

"A lot of the time, what keeps us from being able to respond instinctively or be ourselves is that external eye looking down on us and asking 'Is this what I should be doing?" she said. "But students are fine if they have the desire and willingness to say Yeah, I have some reservations about this, but I'm willing to challenge that. "I've never seen anyone not grow when they're willing to work at it," Anderson said. Every semester, the class starts by working on simple techniques, she said. "This class starts at the beginning," Anderson said. "We take baby steps at the beginning, so no one is immediately put on the spot.

Manhattan falling short of 50,000 people in Census 2000.

Meeting that 50,000 mark would have qualified Manhattan as an urbanized city, making it eligible for entitlement funds.

"If we had hit 50,000, it would have been easy," Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said.

The funds likely would have helped pay for the start-up costs for the proposals.

Now, Manhattan and K-State will need to look at other ways to fund the program or decide on another time to implement such a program, City

Commissioner Bruce Snead said. "The plan is still a viable plan," he said. "But we just need to figure out what we are going to do without the federal dollars."

Abbott said the current transportation proposals would have received help not only from federal funding, but from the city and K-State as well. Commissioner Ed Klimek said the situation puts a greater strain on the two remaining parties. As for the city, Mayor Karen McCulloh said it's back to square one.

The proposed system would have had routes around the city, with a shuttle running between Bramlage Coliseum and campus. An Aggieville

Special also was in the plans, which would have made runs on the weekend to and from Aggieville. It is a system that supporters said would have helped solve some of the K-State's parking problems. Now, with the federal funding most likely out of the picture, the transit proposals appear to be fading.

"Any kind of transit program we were looking at probably had to have federal and state funds," McCulloh said. She said working in the future with Faculty Senate approved a motion Tuesday supporting Student Senate's Advising Bill of Rights.

Resolutions advocating improvements in advising were one of the main platform issues in the campaign of Jake Worcester, student body president, and Dana Pracht. student body vice president, last spring.

Through Faculty Senate support, Student Senate was able to get their efforts passed, Worcester said.

"This is something we've really worked hard on," he said. "I think this is the biggest issue we've worked on that will affect the students' lives."

The first of the two resolutions requested that the university adopt an accountability structure requiring all faculty to be evaluated for their advising. The second resolution deals with student and faculty responsibilities. It will be used to set up the necessary criteria for the evaluation process, he said.

Mickey Ransom, Faculty Senate president, said he is a strong advocate for quality advising.

"I'm always in favor of improving advising, and I think there are some areas that call for improvements," he said.

News of the weird

Good News for the Incredibly Sensitive: In January, the Scottish Fire Service Fairness and Diversity Forum in Edinburgh declared that the term "firefighter" was "too aggressive," thus deterring women from aspiring to the job, and recommended that the title be changed to "firemaster." And in December, the school board in Cecil County, Md., scheduled a vote early in 2001 on a policy that would ban the game of dodgeball and other "activities requiring human targets," as inappropriate for young children.

Board selects new editor for 2002 Royal Purple

The Board of Student Publications named Brent Gray, junior in print journalism, as 2002 editor of the Royal Purple yearbook.

Gray is sports editor for the 2001 Royal Purple

"It's a huge honor to be named editor of next year's book," Gray said. "The Royal Purple is held in high regard by many other high school and college publications."

Lori Wilson, Royal Purple marketing director, said she thought the board's decision to hire Gray as editor will prove to be a good one.

"He has proven himself as a staffer and editor," Wilson said. "I think he has the leadership skills and commitment to do a good job on next year's book."

Gray said he hopes to continue the Royal Purple's tradition of excellence as editor.

"There will be obstacles, but I'm confident that everything will work out — but through a great staff and student support the book will be better than ever." — April Middleton

Senate passes keg bill despite some opposition

TÔPEKA — A bill that would require liquor vendors to track the buyers of beer in kegs won Senate approval Tuesday.

Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, revived the "keg registration" proposal after it died at least five years in committee. He pushed it through Senate despite objections.

Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley, D-Topeka, questioned whether Barnett had statistics to support the effectiveness of his proposal to curb underage drinking.

Barnett, a physician, said he realized that passing the bill won't stop all underage drinking. He said keg parties represent a special situation because beer in kegs is relatively cheap and the quantity of beer available can encourages people to drink.

The measure would require liquor retailers to record a purchaser's name and address before issuing a keg, making it easier for police to track a keg back to its purchaser — and to apprehend adults who provide alcohol to minors.

Barnett and other supporters said the bill would help law enforcement officials who bust beer bashes where underage drinkers are present. They have said that in such cases, kegs become "orphans," meaning no one claims responsibility for them.

But Hensley criticized the proposal for undermining cities' and municipalities' right to regulate keg purchases on their own. He noted that the Lawrence City Commission rejected a similar keg registration proposal.

Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, said she supports the legislation because Lawrence wanted registration imposed by the state. If only the city has a registration requirement, people can still can get around it by purchasing their beer outside the city.

Bush defends tax-cut plan to critic groups

President Bush on Wednesday confronted critics of federal aid to religious groups, his environmental about-face and the White House's tax-cut plans, promising "a second wind for economic growth" if his hudget passes Congress.

After a smooth start to his administration, legislative and economic events out of Bush's control are forcing the new president into a defensive posture.

His trip was designed to pressure New Jersey senators to support his tax-cut package. But the visit was complicated by news that stocks had plunged on Wall Street, sending the Dow Jones industrials below 10,000 for the first time in five months.

"I'm concerned that a lot of Americans' portfolios have been affected; people that put aside money in the stock market are now seeing their asset base decline. But I've got faith in our economy," Bush said in brief exchange with reporters.

While he used the sagging economy to promote his tax-cut plan, Bush cited energy shortages in the West to explain a broken campaign promise on the environment.

"We're in an energy crisis now."
Bush said one day after the White House announcement that angered environmentalists. He has rarely used the term energy crisis in the past, but repeated it four times in a brief exchange with reporters Wednesday.

The first term of the control of the City to compete for state funds due to census

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's population still is shy of 50,000 people and the funding opportunities that come with it, according to census results released Tuesday. Yet, the city does continue to grow, city officials said.

The 2000 Census results show the city of Manhattan at a population of 44,831 — up from 37,712 people in 1990. The bad news, Mayor Karen McCulloh said, is that more than 44,000 people isn't enough to qualify Manhattan as an entitlement city, automatically provided with federal and state money for transportation and housing.

Instead, McCulloh said, Manhattan now will continue to compete with as many as 300 other Kansas communities for state-administered community block development grants. With a citywide transportation plan under discussion, entitlement funds have been mentioned as one factor that could determine if the program goes forward.

"It's a big difference between competing and having the check in the mail," she said.

On the other hand, census results have shown an 18.9-percent increase for the city. That is the sort of information that is appealing to developers, she said.

"We're really pleased to have the positive growth," she said.

City Manager Ron Fehr said most of the 18.9 percent increase was from the annexation of K-State, but he said he estimates the city still is growing by as much as 1 percent on the whole. That, he said, is in spite of Fort Riley's downsizing over the decade.

The difference is seen more strongly in county numbers, Fehr said. Riley County suffered a 6.4 percent decrease since 1990.

"All in all, I'm pleased," he said.

In addition, Fehr said extra funds would have done little to help some ongoing city plans, such as the community housing development organization, or CHDO, a not-for-profit group dealing with low-income

"I'm optimistic that the CHDO will continue," he said. Assistant Director of Planning Eric Cattell said the city is simply left where it sat before. Extra plans will have to stay on the back burner for now, he said. "It means we won't be able to do some of the things we wanted to," he said As census data continues to come in, though, city staff will get a clearer picture of the age and socioeconomic makeup of the city, Cattell said.

McCulloh said the city also might recount a smaller section of the county to check against the federal counts for discrepancies. Though unlikely, McCulloh said a large enough difference might lead the city to dispute the census counts.

Drinking a gallon of milk, sucking air through one's eye socket and eating worms were a part of reality for three men at Haymaker Hall.

The Haymaker Hall Governing Board sponsored a program called "What Would You Do For $100?" Wednesday night.

"The purpose of this event was to get guys together before break to do something fun," said Jeff Olin, thirdfloor resident assistant at Haymaker.

The rules were that anything could be done that was legal, quick and not too crude, Olin said.

The three men, all residents of Haymaker, participated in this event, and other audience members decided the winner by crowd cheers.

James Byrne, freshman in openoption, took part in the program by drinking one gallon of milk.

"I have been saying that I could do this for a year, and I thought I would just give it a shot," Byrne said before the event. "If I win the $100, I want to buy a new pair of shoes."

Byrne started drinking the milk with audience chants of "chug it, chug it" in the background. After finishing a half-gallon of milk, Byrne paused for a moment, regrouped and started on the second half-gallon. A fourth of the way through the second half, he had to stop and never was able to finish the entire gallon of milk.

Byrne said he did not finish the entire gallon of milk because he did not feel well.

Scott Swain, freshman in openoption, entered the contest with his ability to suck air in through his eye socket.

Swain said the sound of the air can be heard when it is done correctly.

"I am doing this just for fun, and it is a way to get to know some of the guys better. I started doing this at summer camps and thought this would be fun," he said.

To hear the sound, the audience had to gather closely around Swain to be able to judge him on his event.

If Swain won the contest, he said he was going to use the money to fix Torrey Easter, freshman in sociology, participated in the contest by eating worms.

Easter said he never had eaten worms and got the idea from his brother, who ate a locust once for $50.

I have no plans for the money, and I decided to enter this contest just for the hell of it." Easter said.

Easter took the worm from his cup and slowly began to chew. The audience hollered and cheered while Easter was chewing.

"I tried not to think about it white I was chewing. I just wanted to do it and think about it later," he said.

After all three contestants had shown their talents, the crowd was given the opportunity to pick the winner. With an abundant amount of cheering for Easter, he was chosen to be the winner for eating the worm.

Olin said he was impressed with the events and plans on having the program again next year.

"I enjoyed the event and would do it again next year, but only if there was money," Easter said.

On the Topic

What do you think of the regulation that requires 30 percent of bar revenues to be received from food sales?

My guess is, the bars will have to start serving Jell-O shots every night.

That only applies if you are open on Sundays. If you want a bar so badly, then close down on Sundays. No one is in Aggieville anyhow.

I would like to know which bars in Aggieville, let alone all of Manhattan, actually serve 30-percent food sales.

Off the Topic

I'm glad to see the campus climbers got beat out in the SGA elections.

For all of you guys out there riding your cycles without a helmet on, you have to be a bunch of inbred hillbillies that got your hands on a cycle somehow. Haven't you learned anything from the past?

Is it normal for your roommate to eat glue sticks?

I'd like to tell David Levin thank you for saying in his column today that it would be a not so bad idea to take methamphetamines while driving. That's about the best advice I've gotten since the homeless guy told me to go into the police station and just start smoking crack.

If I am considered a resident of Manhattan, I think that I should get instate tuition as well. Don't you agree?

Wefald, a solution for the budget shortfall. Take a cue from the athletic department. Students have to make a mandatory contribution of $100 or somebody on the wait list can have their seat. If you want to sit at the front of the room, you can make it $200.

So, with the extra $1.9 million that the athletic department is making off of higher football costs, are they finally going to start a wrestling team?

Membership fee for K-Stateunderground.com is $15 a year, not $15 a month.

Woah. Sorry, Lenkner. I guess the tribe has spoken.

Damn, David Levin is a loser.

I'm not sure why all these people are showing up to the Rec the week before spring break. You are not going to accomplish anything in one week or see any results. So why don't you just go practice drinking and let me use my machine?

How come when your class gets a high average on a test, your teacher thinks that she needs to make the next test harder? Why can't we just be smart?

I'll come flying at you like a monkey on a lawn mower.

What kind of a loser needs a Web site to find a party?

Hey, maybe you can't buy elections after all.

So, Diane, I was just wondering, did Walter say yes?

Street smarts

Campus transit made safer with 1-way street

One little strip of pavement is really beginning myself clinging to where the right lane used to be to tick me off.

Last semester, Mid-Campus Drive between the K-State Student Union parking lot and Anderson Hall became a one-lane, one-way street.

Bellyaching broke out all over, and understandably so. That little corridor of traffic filled up quickly on class days before the switch. It's like the Panama Canal - there's no other place to drive west through campus without heading all the way up to Claffin Road or south to Anderson

And oddly enough, I didn't mind the switch.

Why? Because I knew Megan Richeson before she was struck by a vehicle on Mid-Campus Drive. I've been privy to her struggles just to come back to K-State, the multiple surgeries, just to do something I take entirely for granted. I can't speak for her, but I know it's not been an easy road

And if making it one-way prevented anyone from bearing that burden as well - even if it annoyed me or added a few minutes to my travel time then I was all for it. Hey, if they want to block it off and make it pedestrian-only, for safety's sake, I'd listen to that, too. Maybe that's too far right now.

I rather like the one-way change. Granted, it's annoying when I want to find a spot in front of Kedzie Hall or when I have to trickle all the way through campus on the way home - but it's bearable. It's safer and smarter. And how else am I supposed to get around the Pepsi-Cola trucks that park wherever they please?

So you know Mid-Campus Drive is one-way for a stretch. So do I. I have to ask - does anyone else?

Every day, every single day I've been on campus since the switch, I've seen at least one car go the wrong way down the oneway stretch.

I'd like to hope those drivers who grace our campus aren't all unrepentant morons, willing to ignore the safety of our pedestrians for the convenience of a shortcut. Let's pray they make up a small selfish percentage of the offenders.

I'm willing to give a little allowance for ignorance, especially for those who've traveled on campus only intermittently. It's a relatively recent change, and it's easy to miss. I can still see the yellow dividing line. I find smart move when traffic pops out of nowhere. And yes, I do lose sight of the "Do not enter" sign in the visual clutter of Anderson Hall.

I know this probably falls under the category of "hopeless nitpicking" so sue me. But if this oneway project is worth doing in the first place, it's worth doing right.

Let's get rid of the yellow tape. Paint it over. Burn it off. Blow up chunks of pavement. Use nail polish. Cover it with artificial turf. I don't care.

The stripe's a small thing, but it's a powerful visual cue to drivers, screaming

Hey, sailor, c'mon in, I go both ways!" (It's 5:28 a.m., and I cannot believe I just wrote that. Dear God. Two more days until spring break and one week of uninterrupted sleep...)

Remember the blinking lights on the signs near Anderson Hall? Slap some lantern batteries in 'em and slap 'em up again. Visitors need visual cues to be aware of the change, and I don't think the "do not enter/all traffic arrow" sign combo has proven itself capable of carrying the load. Maybe a sign on the left? Crossarm? I'd even entertain "serious tire damage" spike strips, except that it'd just be a jogging accident waiting to happen.

This is just my pet peeve because it's in my back yard. But nothing's going to happen to make it better unless someone points at it and says, "Hey, this sucks! Let's make it better!" I picked my plot of pain. What's yours?

Women cannot ignore reproductive health

The girl is relatively nervous.

Her legs are open with anticipation of what is going to happen. Part of her is scared. Some of her friends have done this before, and they told her it was an unusual feeling. Not bad, just unusual. But she had waited and put this moment off for long enough.

She tries to get comfortable. But how can anyone truly feel comfortable in this situation? After all, she is alone in a room with only a sheet covering her Staring at the ceiling, she knows she has made the right decision. The decision to finally go to the gynecologist.

Some of my male friends have been under the impression that every girl who reaches the age of 18, or who are sexually active, go to the gynecologist.

This, unfortunately, is not true. When boys turn 18, they have to enlist in the army. When girls turn 18, it's not like they have to enlist their pelvis and thrust their legs into the stirrups, for possible

When I brought this topic up to various friends, I was shocked, even frightened, to realize that several of these women have not been to the gynecologist yet. These are sexually active women in their 20s who have been dodging the women's center for years.

The main reason they cited for avoiding the gloved hands? They were scared. Scared of the "painful exam" or scared their parents somehow would find out they went to the doctor and would assume they were sexually active (The latter would not happen).

But which is more scary: Going to a trained doctor or letting your body succumb to a variety of health risks? Feeling a tiny bit uncomfortable for a very short period of time or having a disease, spreading it and not knowing about it?

Some of the dodgers think they would be able to know if something was wrong with them. They figure they or their partners would have discovered something by now. Trust me, a guy isn't checking for cysts. And when a guy is feeling a woman's breasts, he usually isn't checking for a lump.

So what can you expect? At gyn101.com, information that helps women understand what to expect when getting a breast and pelvic exam is available. It also explains basic terms, such as what a pap smear is.

When women go to their first exam, the doctor will guide through through what they are doing and why they are

Carol Diamond, a nurse practitioner, is employed by the Women's Center on campus. Diamond said there are two main reasons, (besides other STDs) for why sexually active women need to make the trip to the gyno. Those two reasons are chlamydia and the human papillomaviruses, a.k.a. hpv.

Diamond said the first spout of chlamydia can lower a women's ability to have children by 25 percent. It can even prevent women from being able to bear

According to the Web site aomc.org/chlaydia.html, chlamydia is also called the silent epidemic. It estimates that four million people will become infected with this disease this year. The Web site also stated that up to 70 percent of women who are infected don't know they are because they lack

It is not just women who need to be tested for diseases. Both partners need to be tested. However, with this column, I am emphasizing that women need to take more pride in their bodies.

Even women who are not sexually active can benefit from going to the gynecologists. Diamond said women who refrain from having sex but have symptoms such as painful periods, abnormal periods or abdominal pain in connection with their cycles need to visit the gynecologist as soon as possible. It also is a chance to gain general information about a woman's body.

There are no excuses for women, especially those who are sexually active, to avoid going to see a gynecologist. It is an opportunity to be thoroughly checked and to find out information about birth control.

If you are sexually active and are not spreading your legs for your gyno, there is a possibility you are spreading something else.

Cats miss chances to bring baserunners home

Kansas State Collegian

The K-State baseball team for the second game in a row outhit its opponent but came

This time, the Cats outhit Creighton 10-7 but lost 6-7 Wednesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field. The game started well, as senior Mark English hit a three-run home run in the second inning to give the Cats a quick 3-0 lead. K-State would get two more runs in the third and another run in the sixth, but it wasn't enough.

"What's frustrating is we should have scored 10. 11. 12 runs on the offensive side of it," head coach Mike Clark said. "We had some horrible atbats at key times when we had an opportunity to break the game open."

One of the most obvious instances of K-State's inability to hit the ball when it counted came in the bottom of the ninth inning. Creighton led 7-6, and K-State had its number two, three and four hitters batting. The first batter, Osmar Castillo, struck out, as did his successor, Kasey Weishaar, who got caught looking at the third

Then Josh Cavender reached first on an error by Creighton third baseman Brett Taylor, Then, J.D. Loudabarger walked to put the tying run on

A single could have tied the game. Pat Maloney struck out looking and drew the ire of

"It's frustrating. If they're not going to swing the bat in those situations, it's time to look for some other people," he said. "You want to call them good pitches, bad pitches, they're close enough that you can hit them."

The Cats' struggles at the plate didn't begin in the ninth inning. Despite the team's ten hits, K-State lost several chances to drive in runs by not battling the Creighton pitchers better.

"It's not just late. Early in the ball game, we had guys taking. I felt for the most part we competed good, but we've got to find a way of fouling those tough pitches off, particularly with two strikes. You can't quit."

Creighton, on the other hand, was able to fight off good K-State pitches. On what turned out to be Creighton's winning run, Scott Allen squibbed a hit down the third base line to score Joe Mazzuca from third base.

"He got a tough pitch, and he rolled it down the third base line and got lucky and scored a run," Clark said. "He didn't quit on the pitch."

On the other side of the ball, K-State had six pitchers take the mound. Freshman Jared Brite started the game and pitched two scoreless. hitless innings. Then, junior Brock Smith came on in relief and gave up just one hit and no runs in the next two innings.

In the fifth inning, however, sophomore Todd Lundwall took the mound and faced just four batters. Three of those batters walked on four pitches and the other got hit in the shoulder on the second pitch. Sophomore Spencer Black relieved Lundwall and eventually got out of the inning, but not before the Blue Jays had scored five runs on just one hit and a fielding error.

"Some guys did a great job and some guys didn't," Clark said. "It's obvious who didn't. Todd

The loss cannot be pegged solely on pitching. however, as the Cats also committed two errors.

"I don't know how many of their runs got on base by hits, but not many of them." Clark said. "It was one of those games where we gave it to

Cinderella teams, controversy make NCAA excitement

Someone asked me the other day why I liked the NCAA hell, and so will Georgia. men's basketball tournament so much, especially since my team, K-State, hasn't been there in years.

So I told him. It's because of the Cinderella teams - the Valparaisos.

Gonzagas, Saint Claras and the Richmonds. I loved when Wally Szczerbiak from Miami (Ohio) put up 43 points against Washington in 1999. I cheered when eighthseed Rhode Island knocked off top-seed Kansas by five points in the Sweet 16 in 1998 and proceeded to reach the Final

Even if my team, K-State, doesn't reach the tournament. it still influences who wins and

For instance, whatever team that defeats the Cats in seven of the past nine Big 12/Big 8 Tournaments will be the joke of the NCAAs during that same time span (see: KU).

It's because of the No. 8 and No. 9 seeds. Of all the games played the entire year, no matchups prove harder to pick than these. Since 1985, the No. 9 seeds have a tiny six game lead.

It's because of the coaches. Kansas' Roy Williams cries almost every year when his Jayhawks unexpectedly lose earlier than they should. Until this season, Indiana's Bobby Knight could be counted on to blow up, sending dozens of reporters running for cover.

It's because of the small schools that nobody ever has

Even if Gonzaga loses in the first round by 80 points, people still will remember the small Jesuit school from Spokane.

Why? Because it's blessed by God - its official athletic Web site says so. This team doesn't just win, it administers Old Testament-style butt kickings despite having a starting lineup that looks more like the Poindexter High School Ouiz Bowl Team.

It's because of the controversy. This year, Georgia received an at-large bid and a No. 8 seed despite posting just a 16-14 record.

Probably 25 other teams throughout the country had better records and didn't make the bracket.

Those teams' fans raised

I guarantee it. Nothing is as sure to fire up a team than claiming it doesn't belong in the tournament.

Last year, few thought North Carolina deserved a place in the tournament, but the No. 8 seed Tar Heels knocked off topseeded Stanford in the second round and ended up in the Final player biographies done by whatever network happens to be covering the tournament. When Bryant (Big Country) Reeves played for Oklahoma State in 1995, he could be seen on television tromping around his tiny, miss-it-if-you-blink hometown like Gulliver walking through Lilliput. It was idiotic, and I loved it.

It's because of the cheesy

It's because of the basketball buffs who put hours of deliberation and research into their brackets for the friendly betting pool.

It's because of the pool's winner, who looked at his bracket while eating cereal one morning and then determined his winners by where the milk splattered.

It's not, however, because of colorman Dick Vitale, who talks constantly, aimlessly throughout entire halves of play. It would be "awesome, bay-bee" if he were squashed by a giant "Diaper Dandy."

It's not because of Duke. Cheering for the Blue Devils is like desperately hoping this column will end. You know it will, but you just wish it would hurry up and get it over with.

But, finally, and most importantly, it's because even a mediocre, barely informed pundit like myself can make predictions and give insightful commentary such as, "Boy, Arizona sure is good" and sound intelligent. For two weeks out of the year, every guy can sit on the couch and sound like a genius. In the NCAA Tournament, every prediction is right until the game's over.

So here's my pick -Arizona. Boy, that team sure is Competiveness, sacrifices rewarding for former Wildcat walk-on

Kansas State Collegian

For designated hitter Josh Cavender to become one of the most dangerous players on the Wildcats' roster this season, it's important to know what drives him.

"I've always been a real big competitor," he said.

"I love to put in the extra work that I know I need to help myself and the ball club attain the level I feel we should be at."

But when Cavender graduated from Bishop Carroll High School in the spring of 1997, his future as a baseball player rested on a hard decision he would have to make. Sacrifice, this time, would mean paying his own way to attend K-State as a freshman.

"It was a real tough decision I had to make," Cavender said about the decision to walk on at K-State.

"I had to swallow my pride a little and go to a place where I thought I could help and where they could use me.

That pride wasn't easy to put aside either. While a four-year starter at third base in high school, Cavender set school records in hits (150), runs (126), doubles (37), triples (24), RBIs (121) and stolen bases (94).

Cavender earned first-team allstate and all-city honors following both his junior and senior high school seasons, but things would soon change for the budding prep star.

As a K-State freshman in 1998, Cavender earned a valuable spot on head coach Mike Clark's bench as a pinch hitter. Despite playing in just 17 games in his rookie campaign, Cavender led all pinch hitters with a .500 average off the bench. Clark took

"He wasn't real strong when he came as a freshman. He was a role player that was looking for a position." Clark said. "He had a lot of baseball knowledge and competed extremely hard. He was very aggres-

That production and aggressiveness raised expectations for Cavender as a sophomore. The former walk-on would have to prove himself at third base for the Cats.

But Cavender would see action in just 15 games during his second season, and he struggled from the plate. In 29 at-bats, the sophomore managed just a .103 average in 1999, something he said was tough to deal

"The second season was what is known as the sophomore slump." Cavender said.

"I was the same hitter, I was hitting the ball hard, but right at people. I wasn't in the lineup everyday, so it was hard to get into that routine that I'm used to." Cavender would see his role change again in 2000, when he saw action in 43 games at third base for the Cats. His .103 average soared a team-high 255 points to .358, and the third-year player totaled more hits, runs and RBIs than in his first two seasons combined. For many, Cavender's junior season was a wasn't good enough. "I'm glad that I could put up the numbers that I did, but with the competitor I am, none of that was good enough for me," he said. "It was kind of a letdown for me not to reach the goals that I set for myself last surprise, but if you ask him, it just

Last season, Cavender's hitting improved, but another area of concern came into focus - defense. The junior always had taken pride in his abilities in the field, but a teamhigh 23 errors at the hot corner would slightly tarnish his overall improve-

"He had to take the good with the bad last year," Clark said. "His errors last year were aggressive errors, but he did the best job he could. I don't fault someone for being aggressive."

Cavender's junior season allowed the former walk-on to regain some of his swagger.

Pride that once had to be overcome in order to play with the Cats has returned to the senior. Cavender has started all 15 games for the Cats this season and leads the team in batting average.

He's also been working on an onbase streak that includes every K-State game this season.

The senior has also added another aspect to his game - speed. After totaling just two stolen bases in four tries during his first three seasons with the Cats, Cavender already has tripled that number with six this season to lead the team.

Local counselor uses hypnosis to help patients make changes

By NANCY FOSTER

Kansas State Collegian

Years ago, Greg Potter saw a show that inspired the direction his career would take.

He was in the Navy and attended a stage hypnosis show. A hypnotist asked for volunteers to come onstage and then hypnotized them. While in the trance, he had them do such things as Elvis Presley and exotic dancer routines or acting as though they were in a dropping elevator. While it all was in humor, it inspired Potter.

"I was intrigued by what was going on on stage," said Potter, a licensed clinical professional counselor.

As a part of his therapy, he uses hypnosis. While what was happening on stage was much different than clinical hypnosis, he said, it led his career in its current direction. Six years after that show, Potter began attending training sessions on how to use hypnosis as a therapy technique.

Now, more than 20 years after beginning his practice, he has a steady clientele and said he loves his job - one aspect especially.

"Helping people," he said. "I like the achievement, also. The thing I like best is helping someone achieve their goal.

He uses hypnosis on about one-third of his clients, he said, and it's used in conjunction with

"We rarely will be doing just hypnosis with someone. Usually, we will do some talking with the hypnosis work," Potter said.

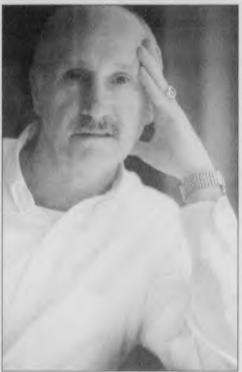

There are several reasons why hypnosis is used. he said. It can be used for behavior modification, refraining from certain issues and indirectly approaching a subject. It also can be used to effectively break a habit, such as smoking. Hypnosis is tremendously helpful for all of these, he said.

It can be very valuable for goal achievement, as well. He said sometimes people have goals they want to achieve, but they don't have the motivation or concentration to obtain them. Hypnosis can help them do this, he said.

"What I've learned most is that people really want to achieve, but sometimes have difficulty achieving the willingness to do it. In other words, 'I want to stop smoking, but in order to do that. I have to give up the cigarette," he said. "Achieving requires giving up some of the benefit."

The most common reason people see him for hypnosis work is for weight loss, he said, and smoking is the No. 2 reason.

Potter said he never uses hypnosis on someone during their first visit. The first meeting entails talking with them and evaluating whether this therapy method is needed.

When it is used, the technique varies from client to client, though the basis of it usually remains the same. He induces the client into a trance with his voice by using a microphone and earphones.

"I can also use music with my voice, which also helps get a person into a trance," he said.

Most people, he said, are put into a trance fairly easily and have a fairly open mind about the

"The fun of it is seeing people change," Stella Walker, Potter's office assistant, said. "They come in one way, and leave therapy another. She said she has seen wonderful things while working at Potter's office nearly seven years. "I see people blossom." Walker said. "It is just Walker said Potter is an innovator in his work, and a dynamic people helper.

"He's on the cutting edge," she said. "If something's new, he knows about it." Helping sometimes is difficult. Porter said.

The hardest part about my job is when we're stuck with a person, and we've started something, worked in a direction and are not achieving progress," he said.

When they hit that point, it's frustrating, he said, That's my job to do something, and sometimes I don't know what to do or where to go," Potter said.

But, when it all comes together, the results are what make Potter happy. "Some come in and tell me they're doing it they're achieving their goal," Potter said. "That's the Debaters to use spring break for preparation for nationals

Staying in Manhattan and doing research at Hale Library is how two K-State students will be spending their spring break.

Melissa Newton, junior in speech communication, and Michael Shultz, sophomore in political science, who both are members of the K-State debate team, have qualified for the National Debate Tournament from March 30 to April 2.

To qualify for nationals, a team has to win three out of six rounds at the district tournament. Newton and Shultz won four rounds and finished seventh out of 20 teams at this tournament.

"We were happy and relieved when we learned that we had qualified," Shultz said.

Newton said she was not surprised that the team qualified for the national tournament.

'I was happy that we qualified. I expected that we would do well,"

Sue Stanfield, director of debate, said she had hoped the team would qualify for nationals.

"I was both excited and relieved that they qualified through the district tournament," Stanfield said. Newton and Shultz both are experience for later. The team will continue to prepare the same way as they have done all year, Shultz said. This is done by compiling more research and doing practice rounds. Stanfield said they know what other teams have debated, and that their goal is to come up with new ideas on the the debate topic.

The topic for debate for this year is whether or not the United States Federal Government should substantially increase its developmental assistance within the Greater Horn of Africa.

The national debate tournament at Baylor University in Waco, Texas, consists of about 80 teams who will compete in a four-day tournament. In the preliminary round, each team competes in eight rounds and must win five out of the eight to move to the next round. For a team to be debate champions, a total of 13 rounds must be won. "My goal is to make it to the elimination round and win five out of eight," Shultz said.

The tournament is a lot bigger with new teams and a higher quality of competition, Shultz said.

"I would love to see them make it to elimination round and have good debates against top teams while using new research and new strategy." Stanfield said.

The teams will be less predictable because they are new teams that we have not competed against. I am excited to see how it goes," Shultz said.

K-State class rings planned for next year

Kansas State Collegian

K-State will have an official class ring beginning in the fall.

Official class rings were popular through the 1950s, but students lost interest in the tradition by the '60s and '70s, said Mitzi Frieling, associate director of alumni programs for the KSU Alumni Association.

Student Body Vice President Dana Pracht said this will bring tradition and pride to the university.

"I am excited that we are embracing a new tradition, one that's for all students," Pracht said.

Students can purchase class rings through many different companies since there isn't an official K-State ring.

A class ring steering committee was formed last semester to consider university support for the idea and to review ring company proposals.

Committee members included representatives from the administration, the K-State Student Union, Student Governing Association, Artearved has been chosen to develop and market the official K-State ring. Pracht said Artcarved specifically focused on the wishes of the K-State student body. The company will be conducting a survey on campus March 28.

"In order for this to be a success, we need to take the time to ask the students what they want," Pracht said.

The official design will be unveiled early next fall, Stelljes said. The committee will decide on eligibility requirements to purchase the official ring. Eligibility will be based on the number of credit hours students have completed, he said, and students with enough hours may order rings after the unveiling. Students will receive their rings at a special ceremony in t least one college student is finding escape in a form of entertainment that is not mainstream. Steven Freund, junior in psychology, said he has been fascinated with comic books since he was 12 years old. "In 1992, Superman died, so I bought the Superman comic book," he said. "I was hooked from there."

Freund said he attributes the popularity of comic books to the way they help to relieve the stress and pressures from school.

'It's like anything else kids do these days - to keep their mind off schoolwork," he said. "You also get to see things that can't be done in real life."

Freund said of the 3,040 comic books he owns, Batman" and "Superman" are his favorites.

He said he likes them for their heroism.

The two personalities have been around for 60 years or more, and the characters have been evolving for so long - it's almost like they are real people. Freund said. "We don't have heroes like that in the real world and it is neat to see."

Comic-book lovers like Freund will have the opportunity to see some of the old and new comics at the Kansas City ComiCon, a media convention Saturday and Sunday at the Jack Reardon Civic Center in Kansas

"The dealer's room will be the main attraction," said Greg Huneryager, vice president of the Kansas City Comic Book Club, which is sponsoring the event. "This is where you can talk to guests, get autographs and see what's there that you never saw before that suddenly catches your eye.

Huneryager said he expects a large turnout, especially since about 80 booths have been reserved.

Featured guest artists include Mike Mignola ("Heilboy"), Michael Wm. Kaluta ("The Shadow") and Kevin Nowlan (character designer for "Batman: The Animated Series.")

"For the most part, these people come in and they are doing it for free. They just want to meet their lans, Huneryager said. "It's nice to bring people to this area since it is a hard area to get people to come to. The fans are always very appreciative."

Other activities the convenion will sponsor include an Amateur Art Contest, where contestants will bring their own materials and be given half an hour to create something, a trivia contest, scavenger hunt and auction. Huneryager said.

Scott Strickland, store manager of The Gatekeeper, in Aggieville, said comic books are a popular tem sold at

What makes them popular, he said, is the storyline and the way the readers can relate and identify with the characters in them. "You can see their growth and development and their interactions with the world, which makes them become a little more real," Strickland said. Although the sale of individual comic books has decreased in the past few years. Strickland said, there has been an increase in the trade paperbacks, or the full collection of a comic series in one book.

"Buying individual comics is like buying a novel. chapter by chapter." Strickland said. "But if they buy the full collection, they can get the whole story in one buy and not have to wait month by month."

The Collegian spoke with comic book artist Mike Mignola, who is famous for "Hellboy," an apocalyptic demon who comes back in the 1940s and decides writer/artist

he wants to be a good guy, according to Mignola. Mignola created "Hellboy" seven years ago and said he attributes this comic to his success. He also was a production designer for the new Disney move, "Atlantis," slated for release this summer. Here is what Mignola has to say about his work.

Why did you decide you wanted to go into the comic book business?

It came time to make a living, and all I wanted to do was draw monsters

How did you decide what type of comic you wanted to write and what made you decide to begin "Hellboy"?
I took everything I was interested in and made up a book about that stuff. It's very strange when you make up something and it ends up having a life of its: own. There's even a "Hellboy" action figure out now. It was a pretty clear indicator that finally, after all these years, I'm doing the right stuff.

With the decrease in individual comic book sells in the past few years, how have you been able to succeed?

Ever since "Hellboy," I've just put my head down and decided I can't fix what is wrong. All I can do is my thing and hope I can keep doing my thing. At this point, anything I want to do, I can do. Because of Hellboy," I've got a place to do it and a publisher

What was it like to be a production designer for the Disney movie "Atlantis"? Disney had already decided they wanted to do it in my style. So, when I got there, they were already designing the film to look like I designed it. It's very collaborative, but there's a lot of me in there. When I got to Disney, there were big blowups of "Heliboy." Disney isn't the place I expected to see "Hellboy," but they were breaking down my stuff.

As a guest at the Kansas City ComiCon this weekend, what are you most looking forward to?

I'll be signing books and finding out what people like and don't like. And, I'll answer lots and lots of questions, I'm looking forward to going because I work completely by myself and I need to check in with regular humans and people who buy the comic Otherwise, I'd be working completely in a vacuum.

What advice do you have for young artists aspiring to get involved in the comic book

Take whatever you are interested in and make a comic of that because it's going to show your enthusiasm. The trick is with comics, you've got to have something unique that isn't just a copy of a computer game. Also, good luck because the industry is in such homble shape.

City still could be zoned for federal transit funds

Campus bus system possible even without Manhattan's financing.

By NICK BRATKOVIC Kansas State Collegian

Mass transit is an issue K-State has the option of pursuing with or without the city of Manhattan, members of the Manhattan Transit Steering Committee said at a meeting Wednesday.

Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services at K-State, said he has the information needed to discuss the intricacies of a system at K-State - plans that could ease campus parking problems.

"If the university wants that, then we go through with our plans," Abbott said. "We have got all of this information. Now, what do you want to do with it?" Part of the plans included a Bramlage Coliseum route that would run a shuttle bus from the Bramlage parking lot to the K-State campus. It is one segment of the previous plans that would have included two bus routes throughout the city, as well as the Aggieville Special route. Though it only is one of the segments, it is a segment K-State possibly could pursue alone, Abbott said.

The entire plan, or all three segments, could be passed by the city and K-State. There is, however, uncertainty over what effect the lack of transit funds from federal money would have on the plan.

Karen Davis, director for community development, said the city still could be zoned a metropolitan area. She also said there are other scenarios in which they might be able to receive federal funding.

Davis said it is unknown whether Manhattan would be zoned as an urbanized area because the specifications for a designation haven't been decided by the census bureau. She said specifications should be made soon, and that designations would be made by May or June.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said it is a wait-and-see attitude, and that a lot of the federal funds will depend on the census bureau.

Now begins the selling part of the plan, officials at the meeting

Abbott said a plan on parking could be done as quickly as the university decided whether to implement one. If K-State did decide in favor of one, it would have to develop and implement the proposal, including the buying of buses and the assembling of the necessary staff.

The committee put the final touches on a mass transit plan. It discussed revenues and gave numbers on how many city riders would use the service at the different costs. It will finalize plans in the next week to present at the April 10 City Commission work session.

Rates discussed at the meeting were $1 per fare to ride for adults, which is a committee increase from 50 cents.

"It is a good plan to run with when we do that," Snead said.

use the library are benefiting from. Students will look back on that and see it as a wise investment of money."

Other issues, such as the SafeRide program, were looked into during Worcester's term but never implemented. Jarod Smith, junior in English, said he is glad these issues were touched upon during the Worcester presidency. but that next year's student body president, Kyle Barker, needs to pick up where he left off.

"I hope our next president and vice president introduce SafeRide into the campus and community because the Wildcat Escort program was such a success," Smith said, "and this will bring it to the community on a much larger scale."

Worcester said he also hopes Barker and Student Body Vice President-elect Brandon Kauffman will take such issues into considera-

"I want them to push the citywide transportation proposal and work out the details," he said. "I hope the next president is ready to tackle that challenge.

Worcester said another such issue his presidency is dealing with is mandatory rental housing inspections.

"It's being considered by a committee right now, and we gave a recommendation to City Commission about it. Hopefully, we're going to make progress in guaranteeing students safe housing options," he said. "We want each student to have safe, healthy living

Pracht said she thinks Barker and Kauffman need to stick to their

"They need to stick to their platform goals and do research on how to get them done," she said. "They need to communicate their vision to the students and community, where they're coming from and why the issues are important

Ultimately, though, Pracht said no administration has been or ever will be perfect.

"In evaluating what you've done, in any student position. there's always room for improvement," Pracht said. "We've worked with the goals on our platform and other issues. I feel good in the fact that we took on many of the goals we set out to accomplish."

Worcester said he agreed.

"I feel really good about the last year," he said. "Things have gone well. We've made progress on our issues, and it's good to know things have improved a year after we Pracht said coming into office at first, she felt she had many challenges to tackle, but that the satisfaction she feels at the end of her term outweighs the anxiety she once felt.

"It's more than you expect at first," Pracht said. "There's always little things, though, that made me realize why I love being in this position. It's given me a new respect for this university, and I've loved meeting people that I wouldn't have had the chance to meet otherwise."

Student Body President-elect Kyle Barker said he's in favor of the transportation programs, but there is a need to reassess the situation.

"We didn't hit the 50,000 people mark," he said. "but this is still not a dead issue.

One option the city has is to possibly partner with other cities like Junction City and Fort Riley so that it possibly could be designated as an urbanized city receiving federal funds.

If the federal government then designated it as an urbanized area. all the partnered cities would share federal funds.

This might make a transportation plan possible, Febr said.

He said federal designations on urbanized areas would not be available until later this summer. and it would be up to the City Commission to decide upon.

"There are also obligations that go along with it," he said.

"We would have to decide if there were more positive aspects to it than negative.

We're online again... Buy your student football and basketball tickets on KATS

A few quick questions (and answers) re: the process...

- WHO'S ELIGIBLE? K-State students enrolled for Fall 2001 hours.
- WHERE'S THE SITE? The Marketplace is located within the KATS site on the KSU home page at www.ksu.edu.
- · HOW? Any student having access to a computer, on campus or off, with a web browser will be able to access the KATS/Marketplace and order student season tickets.
- WHEN? Right Now! You may buy your season tickets at the same time you enroll on KATS. A schedule is again located on the KATS page if you need to see a specific access date and time.
- WHY SELL THIS WAY? Last year's experience proved the KATS system works! No long lines and the ability to purchase from home or campus locations. If you have a computer with a web broswer, you're there.
- IS THERE A PLACE I CAN GET ADDITIONAL INFORMATION AND VIEW THE SITE AHEAD OF TIME? Yes, there is a FAQ page on KATS that has information on a range of topics. And while you won't be able to complete an order at that time for your ticket, you'll be able to view the choices and get familiar with the KATS/ Marketplace site.
- IS THERE SOMEONE I CAN CALL REGARDING QUESTIONS? Yes, you can call the Athletic Department Ticket Office at 532-7606 or the toll free number, 1-800-221-CATS, for additional information.

Grant to target youth tobacco usage

Kansas State Collegian

The Riley County Health Department was selected to receive a grant of $25,000 to be used toward preventing youth tobacco use and encourage quitting. Paula Marmet, director of the Bureau of Health Promotion, said the grants were awarded through the Kansas Department of Health and Disease Control as the source.

Mike Heideman, acting public information director for KDHE, said communities had to submit applications for the grants. Fifteen communities applied for the grants, and seven received the grant assistance. including Riley County.

"The general guidelines were to be consistent with the CDC," Marmet said. "It was pretty much up to the do with the money they were requesting."

The amount of money each community received depended on the amount requested by that community. Marmet said Riley County received the full amount requested.

"They wrote a good application," she said. "It will be a really good project." Joan Smith, of the Riley County Health Department, said the grant will be used for a cessation program and school programs.

The cessation program is in the planning process. Smith said it would be in May and will be open to the community. Speakers and information about smoking and cessation will be

Couple coping with debilitating illness as man struggles to stay active, overcome MSA

Every Monday, Wednesday and Friday morning, Harry Knostman and his wife, Carolyn, participate in Jump Start, an exercise program for seniors at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. In 1996, Knostman, a former engineering professor at K-State, was diagnosed with multiple systems atrophy, which limits his motor skills. RIGHT Carolyn helps her husband into his wheelchair before going to work out at the Rec. Knostman was forced to begin using a wheelchair about six months ago.

By NANCY FOSTER Kansas State Collegian

Every day for 40 years, Harry Knostman would ride his bike to campus. He never drove because he didn't want to lose a parking spot during his afternoon work outs. He also didn't want to pay for one. So, rain, sleet, snow or shine, Harry rode his bike. He worked at K-State for that long, too. It's where he graduated, where he obtained his master's degree in applied mechanics, and it's where he taught several different engineering classes. He loved to be active. He loved athletics and exercised every day. He would dance, snow ski, bicycle, play basketball or handball - anything that was physical. From 1969 to 1970, he played on the champion faculty basketball team. In 1978, he won the Singles Handball Championship for all ages.

He and his wife, Carolyn, would participate in some of these activities together. He always would beat her, so when she began beating him, she started to notice things, subtle things that didn't seem right.

"He could always beat me at everything," she said. "We would go snow skiing, and I would beat him. He would eventually catch up, though. Or when we played tennis, and I beat him, which never happened. We went dancing, and he stepped on my feet. We were never the greatest of dancers, but he wouldn't step on my feet. It got to the point where he couldn't lift his leg to put his pants on."

Harry said he no longer could stand on one leg to put his pants on. He had to sit down

Proposal for Oz theme park stalled for 2nd time since November

By STEVE BRISENDINE The Associated Press

OLATHE, Kan. - Opponents of a proposed theme park project at an abandoned Army ammunition plant stalled it again Thursday, this time for as long as a year. Backers of the Oz Entertainment Co.'s proposal for an $860 million resort and residential complex at the former Sunflower plant near DeSoto had hoped new commissioner Susie Wolf would vote with them.

Wolf sided with the opponents Thursday, though, forcing another 2-2 deadlock and tabling the motion until commissioners vote to bring it back. A fifth commissioner, Gary Anderson, did not vote on Oz issues because of a potential conflict of interest.

Wolf, who did not announce her intentions before Thursday's meeting, said she did not consider the Oz project to be the best use of the former plant.

"The Sunflower plant served us well," she said. "Let's return it to the public for the benefit of more than just a few people."

After failing for the second time since Nov. 6 to pass or defeat the Oz proposal, commissioners voted to ask Kansas lawmakers to extend a July 1 deadline for a final decision on the matter. That would allow the county time to conduct its own feasibility study, which commission chairman Doug Wood estimated would take six to eight months and cost from $80,000 to $100,000.

John Peterson, a lawyer for Oz Entertainment, said the company felt that commissioners have presented it with somewhat of a moving target over years of negotiations. However, Peterson said, Oz backed the decision to seek an extension.

Opponents of the project said they were disappointed by the extension, but were confident that the study would prove their point - that an Ozcommissioned study predicting annual attendance of almost 3 million is too optimistic.

"We've suggested (a county study)

Senate OKs emergency allocation for Union

Kansas State Collegian

Student Senate passed four bills concerning the K-State Student Union on Thursday.

The first bill, a one-time emergency allocation of $250,000, will be used to help the Union reduce its annual deficit. Ryan Walker, privilege fee chair, said.

"It is a great way for us to bring them back to a more comfortable level for the next fiscal year." Walker said. "It also allows another year as a buffer to see if the renovations are going to take effect and increase revenue.

The Union is funded 90 percent through revenue and 10 percent through student fees.

"The problem is, we have more expense than revenue coming in," Bernard Pitts, Union director, said. "Next year's budget is based on projections from the last six months, and this money would allow us to get the best estimate possible for next year when we expect revenue to be up because of the renovations."

The second bill provides an increase in privilege fee funding for the Union's operations budget by

"There is a need for this money to meet the high demands of inflation," Walker said.

The current budget is $1,123,963, and the increase would bring the budget up to a total of $1,158.808. The other two bills were continuances for the

Teen guilty of criminal threat, explosives use

HOLTON, Kan. - One of three teens charged in what authorities call a Columbine-style plot against their high school was found guilty by a judge as part of a plea agreement.

The 15-minute hearing before Magistrate Judge Dennis Reiling ended the possibility of James R. Lopez, 16, being tried as an adult on five felony charges.

The court entered a finding of guilty to one charge of criminal use of explosives and criminal threat.

Lopez was charged last month with conspiracy to commit aggravated arson. The state filed additional charges of solicitation to commit aggravated arson, two counts of criminal use of explosives, aggravated intimidation of a witness and criminal threat.

As part of the agreement, the other charges were dropped and the judge dismissed the state's request to have Lopez tried as an adult, keeping the matter in the juvenile justice system.

"There's no perfect way to come out of something like this, but we've done the best we can," said Lopez's lawyer, Dennis White of Holton.

As for his client, White told reporters, "He's glad to be getting this thing behind him.

Phone companies fight over long-distance rates

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - AT&T says Southwestern Bell is ringing up the wrong number for longdistance rates in Kansas, claiming that some of Bell's rates are anticompetitive and "unlawful."

AT&T, the nation's largest longdistance carrier, has asked the Kansas Corporation Commission to suspend and investigate Southwestern Bell's rates that are lower than 9.4 cents a minute. That is Bell's actual cost, according to AT&T estimates.

"All we're requesting is that the commission enforce the law that the Kansas Legislature has approved not to price below incremental costs and the cost of access," said Michael Jewell, an AT&T attorney.

The request comes just a week after Bell began offering longdistance service in the state. The company says AT&T's claims "are totally lacking merit" and were an attempt to interrupt Bell's entry into the market.

"They would rather litigate than compete," Mike Moffet, a Bell spokesman, said. "This is what has happened throughout the process."

Southwestern Bell's entry into the Kansas long-distance market followed years of battling for regulatory approval. The company is still seeking approval to sell long-distance in Missouri and other states where it's the dominant local telephone carrier.

Annual community fair returns

By ALYSON RALETZ Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan Town Center will be full of booths, bake sales and area organizations from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday to celebrate the 7th annual Community Fair.

"It's an opportunity to educate the community and enrich the community," said Randy Crow, marketing director of Manhattan Town Center. "It's a chance for people to see what's available to Crow said the mall does not charge a leasing fee to the organizations setting up booths at the Community Fair, and it's one of the only days bake sales are allowed in the center.

"Obviously, we are a business, but this is the type of an event when we are giving back to the community," he said.

Crow said various community groups work the fair.

"People can come in and find out about different things that benefit them, and they also can learn about groups that benefit others," he said.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc. has been a part of the Community Fair in past years and will be there Saturday.

"We think it's important that we get it out to the community that we are not just an organization here to access the community's needs," said Ken Scroggs, executive director of Manhattan's Big Brother-Big Scroggs said it's an organization community members can benefit from by becoming involved. He said the group hopes to get five or six more male, and a couple more female, volunteers at the fair.

what makes the event a success, Scroggs said.

"We get to reach people we wouldn't normally reach," he said.

The food court also is helping with the fair, Crow said. Sharro, Pretzelmaker, Subway and Vista all are offering discounts to Community Fair workers, he said.

Mike McCarty, manager of Sbarro, said this is the first year the store has offered a 10-percent discount to fair workers.

"We're trying to bring people to the mall and into our store," McCarty said.

Crow said there always is a good community response since the fair traditionally brings large numbers of people into the mall.

"I consider it the heart of the community and a great gathering place," he said. "This is not the type of event we try to tie shopping into,

Multiculturalism is a goal that will be difficult to reach, said Derald Wing Sue, professor of ethnic studies at the University of California

"I would love to create a multicultural society, but I do not think racism will never be eradicated," he said. "However, the process is as important as the outcome."

The Asian American Student Association and American Ethnic Studies programwas host to the lecture, "Race Relations in the 21st Century," as part of Asian Awareness month. Sue is considered one of the nation's leading experts on multicultur-

The focus was on racial biases, bigotry and discrimination. Sue shared his personal experiences with short anecdotes.

"I was perceived as an alien in my own country," he said.

Sue said a main problem is invalidation and the difficulty in proving biases.

Some things can be perceived as biases, but Sue said there is no way to prove them, and that people must be aware of their biases to overcome

"If not, it just perpetuates them more," he said. "Being aware is also not enough. What are you going to do about that awareness?

Sue said there are three different types of racism: individual, institutional and systems.

"In social studies as a kid, I always felt a part of me was missing - that there was a void in my identity," he said.

The issue of old-fashioned versus contemporary racism also was addressed.

"Modern racism needs to be dealt with on a wide-scale basis," he said.

Sue said outward racism by white supremacists is not what people fear the most, and it is a myth.

Well-intentioned, moral individuals' actions are the ones that hurt.

"The most disturbing is the thought process," he said.

"We can clearly see the bigoted, racist acts and recognize them as bad. It is their decisions that ultimately oppress those of color."

He said well-meaning individuals can be victimized by their cultural upbringing. Consequences from unintentional biases, Sue said, have caused minorities to suffer from poverty and lack health care.

Jonathan Mitchell, sophomore in public relations, came to the lecture for extra credit.

"I found it interesting, especially because I work with kids at the Boys and Girls Club,' he said. "I think it is important that our educators be. educated."

Melissa Riecker, graduate student in marriage and family studies, also attended the speech. Her major, she said, will involve multicultural issues.

"I think he had a good way of breaking down the racism and showing we all have some form of biases and prejudices," she said. "He was just able to point of Investigation would have more personnel and money to fight methamphetamine trafficking under a budget endorsed Thursday by a House committee.

The KBI's budget for the fiscal year that starts July I would actually fall by 3.2 percent to a total of $18.8 million. Still, that total would include $667,000 in federal money which the House Appropriations Committee specifically approved for hiring 13 new employees for anti-meth efforts.

Some committee members were troubled because the federal government has committed to providing the money only for two years. After that, the state might have to pick up the cost.

At the insistence of Chairman Kenny Wilk, R-Lansing, the committee added a statement to the KBI budget that if the federal funds dried up, the state would not be committed to continuing the extra spending. Wilk also made sure the new employees would be

For the Kansas Highway Patrol. the panel approved a budget of $52.2 million, up $2.8 million or 5.6 percent from the current fiscal year. The increase would finance Gov. Bill Graves' proposal to raise troopers' pay by 8 percent.

If committee members wondered how to pay for the new KBI employees in the long run. they had no questions about the problem that methamphetamine presents for Kansas law enforce-

"We have to attack this," Rep. Bill Feuerborn, D-Garnett, said.

The proposed budget would allow the KBI to hire six new agents, five scientists and two crime analysts, Law enforcement agencies have complained that the KBI's laboratory is slow in processing evidence, even to the point that some meth cases have to be dropped.

"We are driving our agents away because we're wearing them out. We have this horrible bottleneck in our lab," said Assistant Attorney General Kyle Smith, the KBI's spokesman. "We'll take what we can get."

5 best, worst vacation spots rated for break or those of you who actually decided to attend classes today, as soon as the day is over, you, too, can start enjoying spring break. The editorial board decided to create a list of the best and worst five places to spend your week.

Best five: 1) Yoder, Kan. There will be a taping of *Amish Girls Gone Wild." If you are lucky you might be able to show some skin or see some skin.

2) Manhattan. The bars will be packed, and there will be parties nightly. 3) Cawker City, Kan.

Middle East. 5) Your home town.

Worst five: 1) Anywhere that the Beach Boys sang about. After all, who wants to go to a place where the sun is shining? 2) Veil, Colo. Anyone who goes skiing can be looking for a rather boring trip. 3) Las Vegas. You literally are betting on having a horrible spring break. After all,the casinos and the night life are nothing like the Little Apple. 4) Anywhere outside of Kansas. 5) Miami, Orlando, etc. Why go to a beach in another state when we have one right here

To the guy who tried to chug a gallon of milk, you're my hero.

I think that the Campbell's soup place at the Union should actually stay open for their posted hours, 10 - 2. Wednesday they closed at 1 and they could only offer lame excuses — it's almost spring break, it's warm outside. Are they going to close early every day that it is warm outside?

Apparently, our economy could be in a recession. However, I think the media just makes it up so that Econ 110 professors can use it as a real life example when teaching.

Next year, I don't care who is running. I am going to vote for the guy who brings "Dilbert" back.

2001 NCAA men's basketball tournament bracket: the best article in the Collegian this year.

I wish people would either get a sense of humor or figure out what verbal irony is so that way they would stop calling in to complain about David Levin's articles.

I find it incredibly pathetic that some people will actually stand outside in the cold and rain, shivering, miserable just to smoke a cigarette.

Is it me or does the show "Survivor" sum up everything that's wrong with America today?

This is in regards to Michael Noll's column: the only couch you will be sitting on is the idiot couch if you think the NCAA tournament is an event that only men can enjoy. Get real.

If the athletic department needs money so badly, could they tell us how much they spent sending all of their office staff, all the administrators, all of the families and girlfriends of the players to the bowl games?

Question for Tuesday: Should there be a 50-cent increase in the price of alcohol in order to benefit education?

Cutting Back

Cuts in military budgets might cause severe national effects

Like the all but domesticated squirrels and the neverending parties in Aggieville, the distant thunder of Fort Riley is just another element that adds character to the K-State Experience, For many people, their K-State experience is nothing more than finding a better way to balance their academics with an active social life, but for about 140 Air Force and Army ROTC cadets, this is only the beginning. For the next four years, these cadets will do more before 8 a.m. than most people do all day. From early morning PT to rappelling off of Memorial Stadium, these cadets will not only learn the importance of teamwork and how to become more effective leaders, they also will be given an opportunity to reinforce what they have learned by leading a group of their peers. When these cadets graduate, they not only will be able to do more push-ups than Willie, but they will be commissioned officers in the U.S. military with a bachelor's degree from K-State.

Unfortunately, these young officers like hundreds of other young recruits - will be entering a profession that society now finds expensive and no longer needed. A society that sees military spending as a waste simply because the Cold War is over and we now are the world super power. The same society that fails to understand why we need a military at all, when there is no longer an obvious threat to our national security.

TRAVIS WEIGEL

These ridiculously narrow-minded views have led to severe military cutbacks that will literally create - if allowed to continue unabated - an "Army of One." Over the years, these cutbacks have resulted in a series of base closings that have gone far beyond simply negating the military build up of the Cold War to severely impairing our ability to fight a two front war.

Aside from the cutbacks, the military also has been forced to "be all that it can be" on a tight budget. This restrictive budget has forced all military personnel to make due with had working conditions and obsolete equipment. And, as if using World War Il era facilities and Vietnam era equipment wasn't bad enough, the lack of adequate funds also has impaired the ability to properly repair and replace many of the military's most used weapons and vehicles.

Sadly, these large-scale cutbacks and budget-cuts are minor nuisances in comparison to the drastic decline in enlistment which has been plaguing every branch of the military for the past decade. Not only has this decline in enlistment helped to fuel further cutbacks, but it has also caused various branches to lower their standards for enlistment, modernize their image and to provide better incentives.

those who are OK, decent and satisfactory. By lowering the bar to compensate for the current decline in enlistment, we are now issuing semiautomatic rifles to people we wouldn't even trust with a water gun.

few good men" and "women," but also

And to top everything off, the army has recently cast a shadow over its long tradition by modernizing their image and issuing every enlisted soldier a black ranger beret in the hopes that it will increase retention and possibly enlistment. Never mind the fact that they are disgracing one of the Army's proudest and longest tradi-

Isn't it rather ironic that an organization which has protected our freedom for the past two-hundred years now has to find ways to protect itself from those it has fought to protect?

Anyone with siblings knows how the story goes. Forget about neighborhood bullies. We had each other to beat on. A few times a week after school, we would get into raging fights about who ate the last Oreo cookie, drank the last soda or had control of the TV remote. The fights would last for hours with words slung and sometimes furniture.

After a few hours or just getting some breathing room, one of us would eventually calm down and mend the broken hearts, or furniture.

I remember just wishing he would grow up and act more his age, or really mine. I mean, who was he to act like a 10-year-old boy when he was 10 years

Besides the bad times, there were also times we have had that I will hold close to my heart. Afternoons of playing Monopoly and watching MTV or running up and down the street playing in the gutters during a rain storm, getting soaked to the bone and rolling down muddy hills.

The first 10 or so years of our lives we were two people, but we were one. We hated and loved each other in the same breath, the family dialectics, we steadfastly held on to each others secrets in one hand and betrayed them in the other. Although our identities were separate, we were one. Shaped and formed by the same hands, the same beliefs and the same blood.

Our parents worked a lot when we were children and so while we had parents from 5 p.m. on, the rest of the day we had each other. Before we eyen knew what happened, we grew up and grew apart. We still lived in the same house, but our lives, which once were entwined, unraveled. The battles between us changed. Instead of it just being a separation of age, it was a for college.

separation and learned how to stand on our own without each other we have found our own directions. Although crafted by the same beginnings, we have ended up on vastly different ends of this

I am the dork who always is studying, I am the card-carrying feminist and have ambitions of changing the world. I also have been called a damn hippie too many times in the last few years to try

As for my brother, while he is a hard worker, he also knows how to kick back and have fun. He is the natural life of the party. He knows what he wants and how to get it and has fun along the way. He is an in-the-closet feminist and is strong in voicing his beliefs. He also has all the looks.

We are as distinguishable as night and day. I am out to save the world, and he wants to run it. Sometimes our differences make it hard for us to see, really see, each other for who we are. It can be easier for us to resort to beating the living daylights out of each other than to talk. I distinctly can remember as we were sitting in the backseat of a rented Bronco, driving through Hawaii last summer. My mother imposed the invisible line rule more than a few times and there were even periods when we stopped talking. Sometimes it is easier to fight than to forge the distance between our differences.

But there have been times when we have been able to calm our inner fiveyear-olds and have worked to foster our similarities. It never happens often enough. I can remember nights of meditating on a sandy beach in Hawaii, drinking and looking at the stars and talking about what mystical possibilities the future held for us.

As I was talking to a friend a few weeks ago about my brother, and more generally about siblings, I came to a revelation. I began to make the argument that parents die, friends fade, marriages fail and the only true thing we have is siblings. We grow up in a society that says, "look you are supposed to get married, move away and start a family." The typical nuclear family in an industrial society syndrome. Marriage is seen as this entity of all importance where you walk through the rest of your life with this person leaning on each other all the while. Don't get me wrong, marriage seems cool, but when the divorce rate is higher than 50 percent, you have to wonder how sturdy this person you are leaning on will be.

The one thing I know is siblings are forever. Much like parents, you don't get to chose who they will be. Someone else who makes that decision for us, maybe that is good. While it is easy to identify yourself with friends and significant others, sometimes you might not know if they will still be there when you turn around. But siblings, are always there. You just have to chose to lean on them instead of beating on them. Maybe you will find that sometimes love can flow as thick as blood and it can be found within it.

Wool judging team goes undefeated, wins title

Kansas State Collegian

The K-State Wool Judging Team made history this year as the first team to finish its season undefeated.

They combined to form the only all-women team. None of the members had prior experience, but through diligence and dedication, they earned the national title.

There is no year that compared to the success of this year's team," coach Clifford Spaeth said.

The team won its first contest in January at the National Western Intercollegiate Wool Judging Contest in Denver. There were 12 teams with 46 total contestants at the contest.

They earned their second win at the Houston Livestock Show Intercollegiate Wool and Mohair Judging Contest in March. Nine teams with 36 total contestants competed.

Spaeth said K-State has participated in both of these contests nearly every year they have been held, but this is the first time he has ever won both contests.

The team attributes its success to the efforts of Spaeth, who is celebrating his 25th year of coaching.

"One of our goals was to win it for him because he puts so much work into it, and also it's his twenty-fifth year coaching - and we thought it would be neat," Latta said.

Spaeth worked with the team for two hours every week in class. They looked at fleeces that came from Mid-

States Wool Cooperative in South Hutchinson. They also traveled to the warehouse on several occasions.

Spaeth said he attributes some of the success to Mid-States because it provides 20 to 30 fleeces at the start of the semester and replaces them throughout the semester.

Another important contributor is the Ranchman's Wool and Mohair warehouse in Brownwood, Texas. Delton Sweatman provides the Mohair workout for the team as they travel to the contest in Houston.

This year's team earned both titles. They attribute the win in the Mohair contest to the education they received at the workout provided by Sweatman at Ranchman's Wool and Mohair.

Spaeth said the team's unity was a vital element in their success. He said if that connection is not there, the team probably will not perform to its potential.

He said he could not recall having a team where everything went so well from start to finish.

Team member Elissa Good said the team's closeness played a big role in the success.

"The four of us clicked as a team. We were serious about our goals and worked hard to achieve them. But we also had a lot of fun," Good said.

However, the darn "Technical Difficulty: Please Stand By .. memo on the screen was getting annoying to say the least, especially when you're trying to read the stat boxes.

Nearly 10 minutes went by with no

Needless to say, I gave up and went to work (yeah, I was that upset). But the whole ordeal ended up making for a decent introinto my Friday column nonetheless.

Enough about that experience - I have a confession to make

In two previous columns over the past couple of months, I projected Iowa State as a certain contender for the 2001 NCAA Tournament title. Friday in the semilinals of the Big 12 Tournament changed my mind.

After a first-round bye, top-seed Iowa State met No. 8-seed Baylor in the tournament semifinal action - and the Clones simply fell apart.

Larry Eustachy's bunch was stung with a 62-49 loss to the Bears and had a premature exit back to Ames, becoming the first No. 1seed to lose its opening game in Big 12 Tourney history.

Thirty one-percent shooting for lowa State. Twice as many turnovers (16) as field goals (8) in the first half. Six missed shots to start the second period.

Not exactly impressive - especially for this late in the season.

So in hindsight, the West Region of my NCAA Tourney bracket was filled out quite differently. In fact, I don't No.2 lowa State to get past the second round.

I decided such a prediction wasn't too risky anyway. Even if ISU advances to the Sweet 16, it won't have a chance against Maryland, as the Terrapins look to have a sure ticket to that ball game.

Who did I pick to win it all, then, since my Cyclone hopes turned sour, you might ask?

Let me give you a hint. It's an unabbreviated four-letter word, and it's not Iowa or Iona (although I picked the Gaels to upset No. 3-seed Ole Miss today in the Midwest).

The answer? Duke: The Blue Devils might not be at full strength without Carlos Boozer for the first two rounds, but they're a shoe-in for the 2001. Tourney title. Besides, they didn't look too bad in their 95-52 win over Monmouth Thursday night. All-American point guard Jason Williams isn't letting a sprained ankle in the ACC Tournament championship game versus North Carolina slow him down, and Naismith winner Shane Battier is - simply put - a stud. If you don't have Duke penciled in on your bracket where it says, "National Champion," you're a moron (i.e. refer to Thursday's Collegian sports column).

Maryland is the only team that might put up a fight in preventing the Blue Devils' run. as I figure the two teams will meet in the Final Four, but Mike Krzyzewski knows how to coach a team to a championship.

Duke has won 26 straight games in the tournament's East Region, and boasts an alltime 21-3 record as a No. 1-seed.

Looks like Krzyzewski will get ring No. 3 in Minneapolis.

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's baseball team will try to reverse its recent fortunes today when it takes on Texas Tech in the first of a three-game weekend series.

The Cars have won just one game in its last eight tries and are 1-5 against Big 12 opponents in that span. Texas

Tech (15-8, 2-4), however, has played very well as of late, winning two out of three games against Texas to take the series last weekend and winning two non-conference games since then.

To have a chance of beating Tech. then. K-State must play better than it did Wednesday against Creighton. In that game, the Cats outhit the Blue Jays, but couldn't get quality at-bars when the game was on the line. In addition, fielding and pitching had mixed performances.

As a result, head coach Mike Clark put pressure on his team to improve. "I just challenged them. I said some of us played good ball, but can we do better. Those of us who didn't play good ball, what can we do to get back going,"

Rowers spend break training

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansus State Collegiun

Spring break, for many students, means leaving the state for fun-filled adventures in warmer climates, extreme physical effort not included. K-State's women's rowing team has a slightly different version of the off-week

The Cats will spend eight days, from Saturday to Mar. 25, in Austin, Texas, on its annual spring training trip. The week will kick off with the Texas Invitational on Saturday and Sunday. In that competition, K-State will match up with schools that have spent far more time on the water than the Cats, who have spent the majority of their time on ergometers, or rowing machines.

"We've had three days on the water," head coach Jenny Hale said. "The ergs are a great strength and conditioning tool, but it's pretty different once you get in a boat with a 12-foot-long oar in your hand.

Despite that lack of on-the-water experience, though, Hale said-she expects the team to still row well.

"We've done such a good job with fitness," she said. "My expectation is that we'll emphasize our strengths. We have a really strong second half, but we need to be stranger off the line. Usually, after practicing the entire week, the Cats end spring break with another competition, but that's not the case this year, which suits Hale just fine.

"There's no race at the end, which I really prefer," she said. "The athletes are usually quite fatigued at the end, and we have to adjust our training to prepare for the race. This year, we can just train all the way through.

A prime area of that training will consist of seat racing, which determines which rowers will race in the first varsity boat. While the rowers usually sit in eight-seat boats for races, during training, they repeatedly race for times in four-seat boats.

As a result of this head-to-head competition, and the warm weather, the athletes generally look forward to the physically challenging spring break.

They look forward to it all year long." Hale said. "I think they're pretty excited."

Freshman thrower hits trifecta at 1st outdoor meet

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Freshman Rebekah Green might not have made the finals in the Track and Field Indoor Championships, but she mopped the competition at K-State's first outdoor meet of the season.

At the Emporia State Spring Twilight on Wednesday night, Green won the shot put, hammer and discus to lead the Cats. Coming off a 10th-place finish in the shot put at the Championships, she won the event in Emporia with a throw of 51-7.75. The mark was two feet short of her indoor personal best but it is the second-best outdoor mark in K-State history.

Green won the hammer with a distance of 165-5 and the discus with a personal-best throw of 162-7.

Sophomore Mandi Peterson won the javelin throw with a mark of 148-7, and freshman Tabra Alpers finished second with a toss of 14-6. Junior Leslie Mikos finished third in the discus and fourth in the hammer, Amanda Riffel placed third in the shot put, Sarah Tilling finished ninth in the hammer and 11th in the discus and Mary McDonald placed eighth in the hammer throw.

For the men, Tamel Sisney won the shot put with a mark of 55-4.25 and placed second in the discus (166-7) and the hammer (172-4). Tony Thompson placed third in the discus and fourth in the hammer, Adam Walker finished eighth in the discus and tenth in the hammer, Craig Smith was sixth in the javelin and Tarl Vetter finished seventh in the javelin.

In the track events, freshman Will Jones placed second in the 100 meters with a time of 10.6. Orion Carrington finished ninth in the 400 meters with a time of 51.44, and Koli Hurst was 15th in the 400 meters.

K-State netters to face undefeated Baylor

Baylor's tennis team has a lot to boast about going into their matchup with K-State on Saturday.

The No. 14 Bears are undefeated in the Big 12, undefeated at home and are on a seven-game winning streak. K-State is not intimidated, as the team is coming off two strong victories over Texas and Iowa State. The Cats lost a total of two games in the matches combined.

'We want to keep the momentum we created last match and carry it into this one," freshman Paulina Castillejos said. "We are not afraid of anything. We have competed against top teams. We can go in there and beat them."

K-State does, however, have some strikes against them. This week was the first time the Cats have been able to practice outside. Head coach Steve Bietau said the majority of the team's competition has already had the opportunity to compete outside. Not so for K-State.

'We got two good practices outside this week," he said. "But by not playing outside as much, it can make a difference. We are going to have to be sharp and adjust to the situation."

Health also is an issue for the Cats. K-State's No. 1 player Alena Jecminkova is questionable for the weekend. She has been struggling with a disc problem in her back. Bietau said he is expecting her to compete, but she is on a day-to-day status.

'She has had back problems in the past, but now it is starting to affect her ability to practice," he said. "Anytime your No. 1 player is questionable, that is going to have an effect on the match."

The menu for the breakfast

The "Green Eggs and Ham" buffet has a Dr. Seuss theme to it. Seay said.

While people eat, there will be Dr. Seuss readings, said Allison Marsteller, educa tion director at the arts center. "The Cat in the Hat" will be read at 8 a.m. and "Green Eggs and Ham" will be read at 9 a.m.

Other activities planned for the morning are focused around the children and will include hat making, "Kiss the Blarney Stone" and coloring.

"It is a real kids morning," Marsteller said. "We will have a pot of gold that has gold chocolate candy and we will be giving stickers to kids at the door.

About 150 tickets have been sold so far, and Marsteller said there are about 250 left.

The proceeds from the fund-raiser will go to providing supplies for the arts center truck, an art supply truck that delivers supplies to schools in Manhattan, and to provide supplies for kids' classes held both after school and in the summer at the arts. center, she said.

Ballard said depending on the weather, usually 650-800 people participate in the tace. The race provides an opportunity for Manhattan community members to come together and celebrate St. Patrick's Day, she said.

Burly Bear targets college-age issues

Kansas State Collegian

A TV network exclusively for college students, Burly Bear, brings open discussion about sex and relationships, student life issues, undercover comedians, music and movies to campus.

Burly Bear Network can be seen on Kansas State Campus Cable, University Revue 17, 24 hours a day.

It is also available on Cox Cable channel 21 from midnight to 2 a.m. Sunday and Monday.

Four hours of original programming are produced weekly in New York City and at college campuses around the country, said Ted Jessup, executive producer and senior vice president of programming. Jessup said the company was founded on the idea that the 18to 24-year-old audience is under-served. Burly Bear has a wide range of programs from comedy to reality to sports, he said.

"The college market has interesting demographics because college is a time of discovery," Jessup said. "Students are generally more adventurous, less jaded and more experimental in many ways than the general popula-

Dannah Feinglass is the host of "Press Junky," part of the Burly Bear line-up.

Feinglass, who does interviews with celebrities, dresses in a costume to characterize the movie they are publicizing in the interview.

In "Impostor," comedians play pranks on college students posing as fraudulent police or fortune tellers.

On "Half Baked," host Matt Fry travels to different areas of the country to cook a featured cuisine appropriate to the region in a college residence.

'Sexology 101" is a talkshow hosted by Tristan Taormino that allows college students to talk in a round-tableformat.

The reality-based nature of the programming leads to subject matter that ranges from safe sex to sexual fantasies. Jessup said.

We're not out to offend for the sake of offending," he said. "Our goal is to produce entertainment that cannot be accessed through conventional media, to capture the inherent sense of fun, adventure and excitement that is part of the college stage of life.

Feinglass said she attributes the success of her show to it's unique angle.

"It is different than an outof-the-box type of interview." Feinglass said. "I dress in costume, and the celebrities I interview play along right away. When they see someone making an ass out of themselves, they are happy to make an assout of you, too.

"I like to promote running events," he said. "The event is a good reason to get out and exercise."

At 1:15 p.m., runners will line up for the St. Pat's 10K Road Race. This race is for runners who are looking for a challenge. The six-mile course will run through the streets of Manhattan and K-State. The winners of this race also will receive a $200 prize.

Walkers won't be left out of the day's festivities. The Leprechaun 3 Mile Walk will begin immediately after the 2 Mile Fun Run. This event is designed for those who purely enjoy exercise and like to walk at their own pace.

introduced two bills concerning Senate election regulations.

The first bill would establish a primary election for all student body presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

"We are looking at doing this because voter turnout for the runoff elections has been significantly lower that the general election in past years," Bill Harlan, Senate operations chair, said. "Creating a primary election will allow the field to be narrowed to two tickets, and then voted on during the general election where most of the voters turn-out.

The second bill would prohibit campaign chalking during student body elections.

"Chalking distracts from the beauty of the K-State campus," Harlan said. "Plus, a large amount of campaign chalking decreases its effectiveness as a campaign tool."

Harlan said the bill was introduced because of complaints from the student body.

People are complaining about it." he said. "I know Campus Fourum may not be the best example, but that was just one method of students voicing their opinion. There is a lot of negative response about the chalking."

scans and MRIs, but these found nothing to be wrong. The couple, though, knew there was. So, they went to the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota, where he was diagnosed with multiple systems atrophy - a disease similar to Parkinson's disease. The difference with MSA is that there is no violent shaking, and medicine does not help symptoms. It helps with Parkinson's patients. But, just like Parkinson's, there is no cure and no known cause.

"He was literally never sick a day in his life," Carolyn said. "He never even took aspirin. He seldom drank or smoke, and he exercised with consistency.

"We were so physically active, I just felt like he would be young forever.

Because he was so healthy, she said people are extremely surprised he was hit by the disease.

They looked to neurologists for a reason as to why this would have happened to him, a healthy, active man at age 63.

"They don't know," she said. "They say bad luck. We've been searching for a reason - you want a reason why it happened.

When they were told it was MSA, or a Parkinson's-plus disease. Carolyn wanted to research it in Mayo's library. The doctor recommended she didn't.

"I think, at the time, he kind of played it down," she said. "I don't think they wanted us to know what would happen with this disease."

Doctors speculated it might have been caused by environmental. factors. With three children and five grandchildren, they worried it might be hereditary. Doctors said it couldn't be, for which Carolyn said they are thankful.

What they do know is that the disease begins with imbalance and difficulties in speaking and with coordination - all symptoms Harry. now 67, was showing. It's a degenerate brain disorder, just like Parkinson's.

With Harry, he became weak and soon had to start using a cane. Then came a quad cane - and then a walker. Now, five years after its onset, he is wheelchair-bound.

"There's a lot of emotions that go into it," she said. "There's an element of emotion when the first time you appear with a walker, you feel weak and don't want them to see you. The same with the chair."

Carolyn installed handles throughout the house so he could hold on to them. He cannot be left alone at all any more. He is weak, and his balance is unsteady. For years, she helped him all alone, but last year, she had to hire a college student to help. A few months ago, she hired a second.

Without someone near, he will fall, she said, but the disease has not only affected his balance. It's affected his day-to-day routine, as well. He no longer can do many things for himself. Carolyn has to dress him, brush his teeth, help him up and down the stairs, in and out of his chair - everything he could do before.

And though it takes longer for them to go somewhere, she said they still try.

"We still try to go to church every Sunday," she said.

Harry is an elder at his church. and he used to be an usher as well. Although it's difficult to get places, she said they don't think of it that way, and they don't get upset when they are late getting there. She said what's important is how good of a time they have once they get there.

When his symptoms began. Harry was beginning to think about retirement.

"We had big plans," Carolyn said. She said they always had loved traveling and had wanted to travel abroad to places such as Europe. But when the disease hit, their plans changed. Her time became dedicated to helping him, and his to fighting for himself.

Carolyn remembered back to the time she was a senior in college and brought Harry home for the first time.

"My mom said, 'Now, that's the one. That's the one you want to grow old with, who you want to take care of you," she said. "He was always such a wonderful husband and father. It's kind of interesting how the roles reversed, but I always intend to take care of him.

Harry retired in 1997 from K-State because of the disease. He no longer could speak or write well - both had been affected. His left arm is so weak that it's immobile.

"I can't do much of anything anymore," he said.

He asked, "Did she tell you that I used to play handball?"

Harry said there is some research being done on the disease. and that he and Carolyn both are hoping for a cure.

"I don't know if we can hang on long enough or not," he said. What is so frustrating, Carolyn said, is that because the disease is relatively new, there is no funding, no foundations and no support groups. According to the National Parkinson Foundation Center of Excellence, between 25,000-100,000 people have MSA. They speculate the number ishigher, and that many are misdiagnosed as having Parkinson's, or another similar disease.

Carolyn said she doesn't want people to feel sorry for them - she just wants people to be aware of the disease. Awareness might help start. foundation or research - something. anything to help her husband of 40 " years. In the meantime, she said, Harry is remarkable.

"One thing that we've learned from this is you never know what's going to happen. You have to cherish each day as it comes." Carolyn said.

Through it all, they try to keep their faith through prayer

"Sometimes it feels like none of them have been answered, but as Harry said, we don't know if they have been answered," she said.

Regardless, Carolyn said they were blessed for two reasons - if he hadn't had been so healthy before, he probably wouldn't be doing as well as he is now and because they have a strong support system with their friends and family.

She said though they never know how it will turn out, they are grateful.

"Harry and I, as a couple, have gotten to see our grandchildren born, and he got to walk his daughter down the aisle. At that point, he could dance," she said. "Our son just got engaged, so hopefully, he'll be here for that."

She said though it's hard on her, she never will stop taking care of her husband - she loves him too much.

"People ask me, 'How can you do this?' And I say, 'How can you not?' What else is there to do? When we married, we married for sickness and for health. You never think it'll actually happen, but I know he would do it for me," she said. "I know that."

for a couple of years, and we never got a response from the County Commission," said Bill Sheldon. president of Taxpayers Opposed to Oz. "We're pleased to have this, and I'm sure it's going to turn into an unfeasibility study Oz Entertainment Co. had planned a 900-acre tourism, hightech and residential center, along with commercial developments at the former Sunflower Army Ammunition Plant near DeSoto. The ground at the site is contaminated, a result of the ammunition process there, and needs cleaning before theme park construction could begin.

Opponents fought the proposal, saying developers were pushing an unproven plan that would have depended heavily on state subsidies.

"If they wanted to come in and put all of their own money on the table, then I'd say, 'Yes, by God, yes.' There wouldn't be a need for a study," said Commissioner Annabeth Surbaugh, who voted with Wolf against the project.

Surbaugh said she wants to study the project's costs and benefits to the county and would consider voting for it if the county's study found the benefits would outweigh the costs.

Clark said. "Don't make excuses. Don't point fingers. There's some glaring things that happened in this ball game for the reason we lost. but we're in this thing together.

"It's time to shut up, and let's play ball. Let's stop making excuses, and let's get some things together. We've got to have more quality at bats. We've got to do a better job defensively. Pitching-wise, we've got to do a better job of throwing strikes. throwing the ball in the zone."

While one bad inning of pitching allowed Creighton back into the game Wednesday, overall Clark was happy that he got six pitchers into the game.

"We got some kids some innings, and that's important," Clark said. "We got them some quality innings, and they had a couple situations they had to throw good pitches under pressure and they did that.'

As for who will take the mound against Tech, Clark won't say.

"We probably won't know until game time who we're going to throw, to be truthful. We've had too many tricks pulled on us by Texas Tech, let's put it that way," he said.

"In the past, where we've named somebody and they've named somebody, and all of a sudden at game time there's a lefthander throwing, that isn't the guy they told us was going to pitch, so we've got some deals we're just going to wait on.

"We have some ideas who we're going to start, but who that is, we'll just wait and see."

Supporter of athletics dies at 90

By BRYAN SCRIBNER Kansas State Collegian

Dorothy Hill Bramlage, supporter of K-State athletics, died Saturday morning.

Bramlage, 90, was a Junction City philanthropist and wife of the late Fred C. Bramlage. President Jon Wefald said the couple was an asset to the university and would be remembered for their generosity.

"Dorothy Bramlage has been a pivotal figure for a generation now," he said. "The Bramlage name will live on forever at K-State.

Fred Bramlage served as national chairman for construction of the 13,000-seat basketball coliseum at K-State, which now bears his name. Wefald said he was a strong supporter of K-State football and basketball.

Dorothy Bramlage and her husband also were leaders in Junction City. The Dorothy Bramlage. Public Library in Junction City was built from donations by Fred Bramlage, who asked that the building be named for his wife.

Shortly after her husband's death, Dorothy

Parties, sand and warm weather - all compo nents Manhattan travel agents said made spring break 2001 just another week of tradition.

"It's all ocean and sun," said Bob Pearson, manager at Kansas State Travel Service. "They mix well with whatever else goes on down there.

Pearson said the hot spots his agency booked trips for this year were Florida, Mexico, Cancun and Padre Island

"They're traditional spots," he said. "Apparently, last year they had a good time, and they wanted to go again."

Florida and Padre also were among the list of popular destinations Creative Travel booked. Las Vegas and Colorado topped high on the list. Surprisingly, Mexico lost rank as a hot spot this year, said Crystal Dittman, travel consultant for Creative Travel.

"Las Vegas is getting more popular." Dittman said. "It's a little bit closer."

'Gladiator' wins best picture at 73rd annual Academy Awards

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - "Gladiator" won five Academy Awards on Sunday, including best picture, sound, costume design, visual effects and best actor- Russell Crowe.

"It takes a lot of people to make a Colosseum, but it only takes one or two to mess it up," said Douglas Wick, a "Gladiator" producer. "To all the wizards who brought to life the sights, sounds and citizens of a faraway world, we should take a chisel to this statue and give you your fair share.'

Steven Soderbergh did what observers felt was impossible: He won best director for "Traffic" even though people felt he would split the vote by being nominated for "Erin Brockovich."

Following "Gladiator" was "Traffic" with four awards, including Soderbergh's, supporting actor for Benicio Del Toro, adapted screenplay by Stephen Gaghan and film editing.

"Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" also scored four Oscars - foreign language film, art direction, cinematography and original

Julia Roberts, the law assistant who takes on a polluting power company in "Erin Brockovich," won best actress. A giddy Roberts ascended the auditorium stage and warned that she would be speaking for a long time "because I may never get up here again."

She clutched her first Oscar and said, "This is quite pretty."

The audience was amused by her glee. "I love the world. I'm so happy," Roberts squealed.

Crowe, who seemed distracted earlier in the program, responded exuberantly. "Really folks, I owe this to one bloke, and his name is Ridley Scott," Crowe said of

"If you grow up ... in the suburbs of anywhere, a dream like this seems kind of vaguely ludicrous and completely unattainable," the Australian actor said. "This moment is directly connected to those childhood imaginings. And for anybody who's on the downside of advantage and relying purely on courage, it's possible." Marcia Gay Harden, who played the long-suffering wife of artist Jackson Pollock in "Pollock," won best supporting actress. Del Toro, the honest Tijuana detective, thanked his director, Soderbergh, and others connected with his movie, while Harden noted that few people had seen "Pollock." since it opened in theaters the same week as the Oscar nominations, and she thanked the voters for taking the time to review the videotapes made available to them.

"Ed Harris, thank you for inviting me to share your passion," she said to her director, who also played the title role.

Because "Pollock" had little theater exposure, Harden was considered a longshot. Judi Dench of "Chocolat" and Kate Hudson of "Almost Famous" were thought to be more

"By the way, that introduction cost the government $1 trillion," Martin quipped to the glittering Shrine Auditorium throng.

Martin showed off some of his old standup silliness from the '70s and, with a mock unctuousness, offered a good-natured skewering of Hollywood.

Martin joked that movie trailers these days give away too much.

Wamego man arrested on drug-related charges

Linwood Batchelor Jr., 1413 Vine St., Wamego, was arrested on drug-related charges on March 19.

According to a Riley County Police Department press release. Batchelor was arrested for a traffic stop at about 7:22 p.m. in the 1000 block of El Paso Street, Manhattan. He was arrested for an outstanding Manhattan municipal warrant. A search revealed that Batchelor had a large amount of money, crack cocaine and marijuana in hispossession. Police seized about 60 grams of crack cocaine, 65 grams of marijuana and $5,600.

The RCPD, Warnego Police Department and Pottawatomic County Sheriff's Department served several additional search warrants as a result of this arrest. More than two pounds of crack cocaine, more than eight pounds of marijuana, four vehicles and about $56,000 was seized.

Barchelor was arrested for possession of crack cocaine with intent to distribute, possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, possession of drug paraphernalia, no Kansas drug tax stamp, unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds and a Manhattan City warrant for failure to comply with probation.

Bond was set at $25,500, and the investigation is continuing. - Bryan Scribner

Athletic director resigns to spend time with family

It came as a surprise to President Ion Wefald the morning of March 13, but when a determined Max Urick, K-State's 12th athletic director, walked into his office to tell him he would be stepping down, he knew there was no chance of convincing his friend

"It is with mixed emotion that I

Wefald said at a press conference March 16. "I highly respect his reasons, but I also know that we will greatly miss his leadership."

Urick's decision to step down, effective lune 30, comes after 44 years of service as a college athlete, coach and administrator. During his eight years at K-State, Urick helped the school build and expand facilities for its athletics programs.

He also played a significant part in bringing K-State into compliance with Title IX requirements.

Urick, 62, cited his desire to spend more time with his family as the primary cause for the decision.

"My compelling desire to have discretionary time with my family is the main reason," Urick said. "It wasn't easy - it's really hard to do. really hard to do."

K-State will begin a nationwide search for Urick's replace ment immediately, but with a resume that includes eight consecutive football bowl games, four postseason men's basketball tournaments and five-straight NCAA women's volleyball tournament appearances, K-State Vice President Bob Crouse said Urick's replacement has large shoes to fill. "You never replace a person fike Max," Crouse said. "You take a look at the strengths that a person demonstrates during his time and think about what we need to do to get to the next level. While a great challenge, it also presents the school with a great opportunity." Urick was quick to acknowledge what he thought was the main reason for his successful career. "Nothing is accomplished without the help and support of alumni and friends of the university," he said. "K-State lans are the finest of any school I know. I want to thank them for their loyalty and support. They wear the colors, sing the song and cheer the cheers. Purple pride will always be part of my life." - Dan Smith

Boeing possibly to move aircraft assembly work

REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF TH

SEATTLE - Boeing Co. plans to move some aircraft production work from its suburban Renton plant to its factory at Wichita, a television station reported Friday.

Boeing declined immediate comment, but scheduled a news conference.

KOMO-TV, citing an internal Boeing memo, said Boeing planned to move its 757 fuselage assembly work from the Renton plant to Wichita over the next two to three years. The move would affect about 500 jobs in Seattle, but Boeing said the employees would be offered other jobs in the company, the station said.

The Renton plant assembles single-aisle 757 and 737 jetliners. Fuselage sections for the 737, Boeing's most popular plane, already are made at Wichita and shipped to Renton by rail for final assembly.

Under a similar arrangement, final assembly of 757s, Boeing's mid-sized twin-engine plane, would still be done at Renion, the Brad Everett, Manhattan City Commission candidate, answers a question to a crowd of citizens at the Manhattan Fire Department. The League of Women Voters sponsored the forum.

Affordable housing, sales tax, growth and economic development were among the issues Manhattan City Commission candidates discussed Sunday at a League of Women Voters candidate

Most of the candidates were wary of raising the sales tax to support economic development at this time, saying timing is the main consideration.

"I'm very concerned if we go back to the sales tax support that we're going to have an unnecessary burden on our retail community, particularly if the state uses some of the sales tax to fund education." candidate and Mayor Karen McCulloh said.

Imposing a sales tax at the same time the state and the county are looking to raise the sales tax was also a concern for candidate Brad Everett, a local businessman.

"We need to look at the timing to be sure we're not overtaxing ourselves," Everett said.

The more important issue to Manhattan is bringing in good paying jobs, candidate David Johnson said. He said the most important thing to do is drive down the poverty rate because Riley County has the highest poverty rate in the state

"The fastest and the best way to do that is with good paying jobs,"

Johnson said. 'You can't live on $7-8 an hour jobs in Manhattan.

Incentives are an important part of attracting businesses to Manhattan, candidate Mark Taussig said, but he doesn't like the idea of taxing citizens to provide

"I think we need to support and encourage businesses that are here first to help them grow and give them incentives before we bring in new businesses," Taussig said.

All of the candidates agreed providing safe, affordable housing was an important goal, but each differed slightly on the approach. Everett said developers who want to rejuvenate an area should sit down with property owners to discuss their concerns.

"We need to be sure we're being fair to everyone in that area," he

Habitat for Humanity deserves Manhattan's support because no one can provide housing in the same way that organization does, Johnson said.

McCulloh said the organization can't provide enough housing fast enough to meet the current need.

"We need about 2,700 units in the city, and Habitat for Humanity has built about 10," she said.

McCulloh said she favors zoning and the comprehensive land use plan to provide affordable

Zoning ordinances and the comprehensive land use plan protect older neighborhoods; Taussig said.

Approximately 30 students and staff members had time to relax at Moore Hall last week, despite the occasional sound of drilling or sprinkler installation.

"I slept a lot," Lisa Griffiths, junior in elementary education. said. "Once, they kicked me off my floor for a while so they could install some sprinklers, but other than that, I was able to relax and read some books."

Griffiths was one of the many K-State students able to spend their spring breaks in Moore. The new option for continuous housing in Moore allows students to stay in their own rooms over breaks, making it easier for residents to stay in Manhattan if they wish.

Michael Pennington, Moore Hall residence life coordinator, said the plan for continuous housing came into effect in the fall, and it has been a great solution to the problem that came up over break.

"There are a lot of residents that cannot leave the residence halls when they close down." Pennington said. "In the past, students would have to pack up and move to other halls when they wanted to stay. With this plan, residents that are going to plan on staying over breaks just apply to live on our continuous housing floors here in Moore."

The plan for continuous housing gives residents a nine-or 12-month option. Residents can plan to stay in the same room for as long as they need.

"The first and second floors are for the continuous housing residents," Pennington said. "We had an overflow of men, though, and had to put them on other floors.

Pennington said the option for continuous housing has made things a lot easier on the residents and the residence hall staff.

"Residents do not have to move to other rooms in other halls. anymore, so that is one good thing," Pennington said. "It is also a lot cheaper for the halls, because we only have to operate one desk and keep a few staff members around."

Marcelo Dabarrosa, freshman in mechanical engineering, said he stayed in the residence halls over break so he could practice basket-

"I moved here only three weeks ago," Dabarrosa said. "They put me on the first floor of Moore, because I need to stay over breaks to practice basketball." Dabarrosa said he thinks the option for continuous housing is "For people like me that need to stay, this is a good thing," he said. Griffiths stayed in Moore Hall as very convenient for a lot of people.

a resident but also as a staff member.

"I am from California, so this was a good option for me," Griffiths said. "I worked at the front desk of Moore and, also, just hung out with the people that were here. We relaxed a lot and watched a lot of movies late at night

Pennington said that in the past, when students had to stay on campus over break, it was a lot of trouble for the residence halls and for the residents. With the new plan, a lot of stress has been relieved.

"This really is a good option for us," Pennington said. "I think the residents are glad they do not have to leave, and it makes it easier on us to just have them in one place. This system is the best, and we have been happy with it so far."

Jardine begins watch program

Kansas State Collegian

Jardine Apartment Complex is starting a community watch program to help residents become more aware of their surroundings.

"We want people to help us be the eyes and ears of Jardine," said Kevin Wanklyn, resident assistant in Jardine's Wiley apartments.

Earlier this month, about 20 residents agreed to take part in the program.

Those participating were given stickers to put in their windows and packets with emergency contact numbers and informa-

Residents are encouraged to page or call staff members on duty if problems occur, Wanklyn said.

"A lot of people would have a noise complaint and call the police. That's not the police's job. It's our job," he said. "As staff, we can help solve the problem, and police can only say to quiet down."

Staff and residents at lardine will try to solve most problems themselves.

Worst case scenario, we would call the police," Wanklyn said.

He said there are a lot of little things residents can become more aware of.

"It could be as simple as a light bulb," he said. "We just want people to be more aware of the help available to them and more aware of the community."

Shelly Harper, a member of the program, said she's been watching things more closely since the program began.

"The other night my husband and I were walking to the laundry room, and we saw that a light was burnt out. Since we signed up for this, I thought 'Oh, I better call," Harper, graduate student in biology, said.

Harper said she thinks lardine is a safe place.

lardine resident Paula Wedel said a lot of people living in the apartments weren't aware that a staff member is always on duty.

"I think there's a gaining awareness that people are around all the time," Wedel, senior in dietetics, said. "That's nice because not all other apartments have that."

The main thing the program will do. Wedel said, is to get neighbors to help each other out.

This will build more of a community."

achieving their goals. Their initial platform included focusing on academic quality, technology advancement and improvement of student life. The duo also worked to improve the quality and quantity of advisers. They also worked to get transcripts available online, which possibly will be available soon.

Worcester and Pracht did a great job of incorporating both the city and campus on various issues, most notably with mandatory housing inspections and transportation planning. They also provided strong leadership at the Kansas Legislature.

The pair devoted a considerable amount, perhaps too much, of their term to promoting the student activities center, which ended up failing in a student referendum vote. However, they did return attention to the need for communication and cooperation among student groups across campus.

Kudos to Worcester and Pracht. They were excellent leaders who not only represented the student body, but also K-State, extremely well.

Recent school shootings renew memory of Columbine

I can still remember exactly where I was when I found out about the Columbine school shooting. I had been living in Denmark for the past eight months, finishing up a year of studying abroad. I couldn't sleep one night and snuck into the living room to watch television.

I impulsively flipped to CNN, hoping to find some American news, but the only thing being broadcast was updates on the war in Kosovo. Only half listening, I noticed there Danish friends said a word about the was a break in my news program. An American reporter was on the screen. "This just in," she said. "A deadly attack at a Colorado school has left many students stunned.

It was late at night for me, but early afternoon in Colorado's Mountain Time zone. The shooting had just happened, and I watched the whole story unfold before my eyes that night. I watched the death tally rise, until all the victims were accounted for. I watched students stream from the building in tears and hysterical parents look for their children. I didn't realize it at the time, but in a darkened living room 10,000 miles away from the United States. I watched a nation trans-

I didn't get much sleep that night; I simply sat up and thought. I thought about the victims and the survivors. I thought about the criminals behind it all. I thought about the shattered families and the lost childhoods.

I thought about the spring of my high school senior year and how happy and invincible I felt. I imagined it all being taken away.

I thought about my family: my father, then a middle school principal, sitting in his office or walking the halls. I thought about my adolescent brother and sister sitting in classrooms or playing basketball

"Did you hear about those kids who died at that school yesterday?" I asked a

"I didn't, but still, it is sad."

They all kind of looked at each other in an uncomfortable silence as tears welled

"Well, that's America for you," one, boy finally broke the silence. "McDonalds, Nike and teen-agers killing each other."

Everybody laughed. Everybody but me. At the time, I was hurt and saddened beyond belief. Not only was I personally concerned, but I knew an entire nation, my America, was mourning. But there, across the ocean, none of that mattered, because in the eyes of those who don't know any better, the students who died and the students who live are all just one big mass of American youth - Nikewearing, McDonald's-eating, machine-

> I have thought about that comment numerous times since then. Twenty incidents have happened since the Columbine incident. From California to Arizona to Oklahoma In Kansas to Pennsylvania to Florida, school violence has swept the nation. Out of these 20 nine resulted in students being severely injured or killed. And this phenomenon has not been contained to high schools. In February 2000, a first-grade girl was killed by her 6-year-old classmate.

The stories are there. The facts are there. The graves are there. No one can deny these events have happened. Our nation has been changed. We live in a time when the phrase "pull a Columbine" is popular lingo - a blood-curdling

But I will never believe that is all America is. The threat of violence in schools will never be able to muffle all the promise and hopes of students nationwide. America's children are America's future, and there is more to those children than Nikes and Big Macs.

Sure, it might scare me when I think about it. Like I said, every person in my family is in a public school every day. Someday I plan on having children, and I will load them on the yellow bus every morning, relying on nothing but faith to bring them back to me. But I know, and Time magazine has reported, that 99.99 percent of schools are still violence free.

My heart still breaks every time I hear about or see another act of school violence, and my sympathy goes out to all of the victims and survivors.

But as a nation, as individuals, as students ourselves, we must remember that our hopes, our dreams and our futures lay in youth.

So do everything you can - get involved in a child's life, help make the world a better place. Help ensure that our youth, as a whole, will never be reduced to a stereotype.

California school deals with violence

By MICHELLE MORGANTE The Associated Press

EL CAJON, Calif. - The 18-yearold student accused of wounding five people at his high school is a powerfully built loner intimidating enough to be called "The Rock," a boy former neighbors said was fascinated with guns.

But Jason Hoffman also is known as a kid so concerned about his schoolwork that he got upset with classmates who didn't pull their weight on projects and stewed about earning enough credits to graduate.

As this community struggled with the second high-school shooting in three weeks, a conflicted picture emerged of a troubled teen who may or may not have shown the oftdiscussed signs that are supposed to warn educators and peers that violence is about to erupt.

"He had this hate-the-world walk," 18-year-old Sean Connacher told The San Diego Union-Tribune. "This is a kid who didn't get picked on very often because most of the kids were afraid of him.'

Hoffman remained hospitalized Friday, recovering from wounds he got in a short gun battle with police at Granite Hills High School, where three students and two teachers were wounded Thursday by shotgun fire.

The shooting came less than three weeks after a 15-year-old allegedly killed two classmates and wounded 13 others at Santana High in Santee, just seven miles away and part of the same school district.

This time, a community already weary of headlines and TV news trucks quickly seized on one positive bit of a story that otherwise had a depressingly familiar air: a hero.

Police officer Richard Agundez, a former SWAT officer assigned to the campus, ran toward the shotgun blasts that rocked the campus during the middle of the day and ended the attack by wounding the gunman.

"Agent Agundez is the hero of the day." Principal Georgette Torres said.

Hoffman was armed with a 12gauge, pump-action shotgun and a 22-caliber semiautomatic handgun, authorities said.

Hospitalized with wounds to the iaw and buttocks, he wasn't immediately charged or interrogated. Prosecutors were considering charges ranging from assault to attempted murder, San Diego County District Attorney Paul Pfingst Investigators hadn't determined a motive, Pfingst said.

7 walk from Wichita to Topeka to protest death penalty

Alma Weber held an aged photograph of her son Paul with his toddler daughter, Amy.

In 1976, a man on parole stabbed Paul, a parole officer, to death with a butcher knife.

Weber's message to a group of about 50 people in Manhattan last week was not about anger or vengeance. She spoke of joy, forgiveness and opposition to the death

The death penalty was not an option at the time of Paul's murder. His attacker was sentenced to life in prison and remains there today.

Weber said the taking of a life does not justify the taking of another life.

Nobody had a right to take my child's life," she said. "If I feel that way, every other mother feels that way. I don't have the right to ask

The gathering was a part of Journey for Justice, a walk from Wichita to Topeka to protest the death penalty. The walkers consisted of a core group of about seven walkers, with other walkers joining for intervals along the route.

The walkers are supposed to lobby the Kansas Legislature today.

Some people talk about closure for families when killers are executed. Weber said there are no endings.

"We'll always remember how our loved ones died," she said.

Weber said she tried to celebrate Paul's life and enjoyed her eight other children and 22 grandchildren.

"I had him for 26 years," she said.

As for Paul's killer, Weber said he will have to suffer with the guilt of what he has done for the rest of his

"He is in a place where he can't hurt people," she said. "He can make peace with God."

Manhattan resident Eldon Epp said the pending execution of Timothy McVeigh was a great national shame. He echoed Weber's

"It won't give us a chance to mourn because of our vengeance," he

Although the gathering was not faith-based, a religious thread ran through the conversation.

Ben Coates, past coordinator of the coalition against the death penalty, said the greatest argument against the death penalty was that it was just wrong.

Citizens give up certain rights to property and liberty in exchange for security, but your life is not yours to give, he said.

"Concerning the decision of taking of human lives, my God has not asked my help in making those decisions," Coates said.

Some of the participants called the fight against the death penalty the other right-to-life issue.

Weber said people need to believe on both sides of the spectrum, that if abortion is wrong, the death penalty is wrong.

Coates, who has worked in the correction system and taught sociology, outlined practical reasons why the death penalty should be stopped.

"It is not administered equitably. More black offenders than white offenders are put to death," he said.

Death sentences are also affected by one's class in society, said Christopher Renner, who is on the board of Manhattan Alliance for "Poor people don't have the money to buy justice," he said.

Ninety-three people, or one in seven people, have been released from death row, Coates said.

"That's not good odds," Coates said. "I am a poker player. I wouldn't want to go to the table with a 13- to 15-percent bias against me."

Pressure to obtain a conviction, racial bias and prosecutorial misconduct could all be factors in innocent people sitting on death row, Coates

"There is a fair chance innocent people will be put to death, and more than a fair chance innocent people have been put to death," he said.

Texas A&M used two three-run innings against two different K-State pitchers to blast the Cats 10-1 Sunday afternoon.

In the first inning. the Aggies earned their first big inning when catcher Rusty Meyer drove in second baseman Ty Garner with a single to left field. In the next at-bat, first baseman Travis Wong homered off K-State's starting pitcher Chad Duckers to drive the score to 3-0. The Aggies continued to batter Duckers in the second inning, as third baseman Kevin Theiss led off the inning with a left-field double. The Cats would catch a break, though, as the next batter, right fielder Carlos Sepulveda, smashed a hard line drive to shortstop Osmar Castillo, who turned the double batters before being replaced on the mound by Spencer Black.

Duckers would walk the next two

"We just really felt fortunate getting out of the second inning with us being only behind 3-0," head coach Mike Clark said. "They lined into a double play, we picked a runner off second > base, otherwise that could have really been ugly early. I thought Spencer did a good job of holding the fort, but we probably left him in there a little bit too long.

Black would finish out the inning and the next without giving up a run, but he would give up three runs in the fourth inning and two runs in the fifth before being replaced by Jared Brite, who would give up just one run on two hits over the next 3 2/3 innings.

"We're looking hard at Jared as a possible weekend starter. He threw the ball really well and did a real good job," Clark said. "Those were probably the bright spots in the game. Those two guys (Brite and Black) came in and at least gave us a chance to come back.

K-State would not come back however. Despite getting eight hits, the Cats would score just once.

That run came after right fielder Pat Maloney reached third after hitting a single. He scored when catcher Nick Scelfo hit a dribbler up the third-base line. That would be the only time K-State could string hits together to score runs.

"We're not making very good adjustments offensively. That's what's causing us some problems," Clark said. "We had some quality at-bats, but we're just not putting together a string of them that we need to in order to get some runs in the ball game.

"We were lucky to get the run we got on the little roller. A couple of times with runners on base, we hit the ball right on the nose right at people. But those things will balance out. We've just got to become better offensively at being productive up at the plate. We just don't get very many productive at-bats."

That lack of production has plagued the Cats all year.

In the last 12 games, for instance, K-State has been shut out four times despite starting six players with batting averages better than .280. Part of the problem against the Aggies was the inability to get the lead-off runner on of it, I thought the guys competed through it. We did create some offense with one outs and with two outs," Clark said. "Offensively, our guys just don't make the adjustments that need to be made right now.

We've got some kids with some nice averages, but we sure don't score runs well.

Three K-State equestrian riders qualified for the National Championships after placing in the top two at the Zone Championships this weekend.

Kelly Gratny, the 2000 Reserve Champion in Western Horsemanship, won the Open division at Zones. Maureen Reynolds placed second in Intermediate Fences, and Kristy Rue, the only Cat rider to compete in two events at Zones, placed first in Novice Fences and will advance in that category.

The three riders will represent K-State at the National Championships in Conyers, Ga., at the Georgia Horse Park, May 3-6.

Other riders who competed but did not advance were Gretchen Pfister in Walk/Trot and Emily Mertz in Intermediate Flats.

Tennis team wins 1 match during break

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's tennis team took on a three-match road trip over spring break and returned with

The No. 44 Cats' two losses came against higher ranked opponents - No. 14 Baylor and No. 29 Fresno State. The lone win came against unranked Pacific.

In the first match, at Baylor on Saturday, March 17, K-State fell 5-2 to the Bears. Baylor's top-three singles, all of whom were ranked in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's top-100 players, proved to be too much for K-State. No. 30 Jahnavi Parekh easily defeated K-State's top singles player Alena Jecminkova in straight sets. 6-0, 6-0, and the same was true for the next two

"We needed close to our best performance, if not our best performance, in singles play today," head coach Steve Bietau said. "Baylor played awfully well, especially in the top three positions.

K-State did fight back and won the No. 4 and 5 singles matches. Kathy Chuda defeated Karin Andersson 6-4, 6-1 and Paulina Castillejos notched a 6-4, 6-2 win over Paola Stephen, but the outcome already was decided, as Baylor had racked up four points by winning the doubles point.

As a result, the match left plenty for the Cats to improve upon. Bietau said.

"It was a good performance by Kathy and Paulina," Bietau said. "We were able to breathe pretty easy through those two.

"But I would like to see us be a bit more resourceful when we get in trouble. There were times where we didn't have the answer initially but had a chance to do things and just never got on track.

With the victory, Baylor improved to 12-2 overall and 5-0 in the Big 12. K-State dropped

Lack of water time hurts women's rowing team

Kansas State Collegian

When the K-State women's rowing team traveled to Austin, Texas, for its annual spring break workout and competition in the Texas Invitational, head coach Jenny Hale fully expected to struggle against the southern schools.

K-State had been on the water for just three days this spring, considerably less than those schools like Texas, Tulsa and SMU, which hall from more temperate climates

The difference was very noticeable, but only against Texas. The Longhorns' Varsity 8+ defeated K-State by more than 13 seconds in the 2,000-meter race, with the Cats finishing with a time of 7:02.0 behind Texas' 6:48.8. For the rest of the K-State boats, the times would differ, but the results would be the same.

Texas swept the Cats on Saturday: March 17, defeating the Novice+, Second Novice+, Second Varsity 8+ and Varsity 4+ boats fairly handily, but Hale still was relatively satisfied with the performance.

"I think we rowed OK," she said. "We've been on the water three times this spring. We faced a crew that has been on the water for three months. We can't feel bad about our performance at all. We have a lot of work to do this week. I think it was reasonable given

K-State performed much better Sunday. The Varsity 4+ finished with a time of 8:15.7 to defeat Tulsa. The Varsity 8+ started its race slowly but raced well in the second 1,000 meters and narrowly fell to Tulsa, losing by just 1.3 seconds. Given more time in the water, K-State could improve that performance, Hale said.

"The Varsity is having to fight through the first 1,000 meters. They came back to within a seat and a half. The start and the spring are things you need water time to

Against SMU, K-State won both the Varsity and Second Varsity 8+ races. In the Varsity 8+, the Cats finished with a time of 6:48.9, almost seven seconds ahead of SMU.

The Second Varsity boat raced to a time of 7:12.3, more than 29 seconds faster than SMU. As a result of K-State's improved performances in each race, Hale said she felt happy with the week. "I think it's really important that they got better every time off the line," Hale said. "They are much more mature, and they make the changes the coach staff asks them to make. The team will return to action

Saturday, when it travels to Lawrence to face Kansas, Iowa, Massachusetts and Tennessee.

12 behind NCAA hoops leaves Big

Welcome back to Manhattan from wherever you spent your break. Feels good to be back, doesn't it? Long walks to class, 40-degree weather and knee-deep potholes. Home sweet

At least we have a week of NCAA hoops left. Michigan State and Maryland saved some dignity for me, as these were the only two of my Final Four picks to make it, as Kentucky and Illinois were knocked off. Let me make a couple observations about this DAVID PLOUS year's tournament before we look at this Saturday's National Semifinals:

Too bad KU had to crash out of another NCAA tournament in horrible fashion. The Jayhawks got beaten by Illinois in every phase of the game in their Sweet 16 matchup.

The team is the biggest waste of talent in Division I. It has enough McDonald's All-Americans to have an Extra Value Meal named after it and still can't make it to the Elite Eight. It reminds me of last year's Jayhawk team, and the year before, and the year before...

The Big 12 really showed why it isn't a power conference in basketball anymore, as Iowa State, Oklahoma and Texas all were beaten by lower seeds.

Nice call by me about Gonzaga "not sneaking up on anyone this year" like I wrote in my last column. The 'Zags beat Virginia and became the first team to make it to the Sweet 16 three years in a row carrying a double-digit seed. Note to CBS: If you have to let Bill Walton call NCAA games, at least don't let him call his own kid's games.

It strains the ears listening to him argue with play-by-play man

Dick Enberg all game, and I hope his son, Arizona forward Luke, doesn't ever see a tape of the game and hear the way his old man dwells on every mistake he makes.

In non-tournament news, Bob Knight now is the coach at Texas Tech. I am happy about this. The Big 12 needs some new blood.

It will be exciting to see Knight toss some chairs and maybe choke some people - no wait, I mean coach -

Now for the teams still playing. In one of Saturday's matchups, you have the fourth meeting of Duke and Maryland. Both are on a roll. The three previous meetings between the two have been classics. Duke won at Maryland and in the ACC tournament. Maryland won at Cameron Indoor Stadium, which is no small feat. This Duke team reminds me of the squad it had the 1999 tournament with Trajan Langdon, Elton Brand and Co. Everyone thought the team would cruise to a title but got beat by a hungry underdog UConn team. I think history will repeat itself. I like Maryland in an upset.

The Devils rely too much on Shane Battier and Jason Williams. Both of these guys need to score 23-25 points for Duke to win versus Maryland. The Devils have so far in the tournament, but won't against Maryland. Who knows what is coming? Plus, Terp center Lonny Baxter is on a roll after destroying Stanford.

The other semifinal features Arizona and Michigan State.

Both won tough regional final games. Arizona has been on a mission since Wildcat coach Lute Olsen's wife passed away earlier in the season.

However, the Wildcats' luck will end against Michigan State. I think Michigan State's experience and rebounding ability will get it to See PLOUS on PAGE 8

Preparing for parenthood might be the last thing on the minds of many K-State students, but planning for the future could be the healthiest decision.

On April 21, the March of Dimes, a non-profit organization dedicated to improving the health of babies by preventing birth defects and infant deaths, is sponsoring Walk America. The walk will begin at Memorial Stadium and continue through campus.

People participating in the event either have made donations to the charity or are participating in support of the organization, Emily King, freshman in microbiology, said.

King said she is participating in the activity because it is fun and because it supports a wonderful organization.

"It's a great charity, and a lot of us will have kids someday and will benefit from this," King said. "It's a great opportunity to give to children.

March of Dimes is targeting college students because they are in the prime age of the prepregnancy stage in life, said Brenda Reis, special events coordinator for the March of Dimes.

"This is the time when students can already prepare for having children by practicing good health," Reis said. "Both men and women have a part to play in a healthy child's life."

The organization hopes to raise about $35,000 during Walk America, Reis said.

"I'm really excited for the event," she said. "This a great way to involve both K-State and the Manhattan community. People can bring families out and get together for a good cause. The reason why Victoria Lowdon, freshman in political science, said she is participating is in honor of the numerous people who have benefited from the March of Dimes. "I think it's a really good opportunity to do something that I believe in." she said. "I hope people participate because it's going to be a lot of fun. Lowdon said she has prepared for the walk by promoting the organization to other students and Manhattan residents. She said she hopes more people will learn about the March of Dimes from the

"This is a great way for the organization to put itself out there," Lowdon said.

King, who has volunteered for the March of Dimes since high school, said she thinks the event is a wonderful way for students to get involved since it is right on campus.

"Walk America is a positive and great way to get involved," she said.

Pilots end talks; flights canceled

The Associated Press

HEBRON, Ky. - Comair Inc., the nation's second-largest regional carrier, and its pilots broke off contract talks Sunday, and the carrier canceled most of its flights scheduled for Monday in preparation for a possible strike.

Comair spokeswoman Meghan Glynn said negotiators were told by union leaders Sunday that they were unable to compromise on major issues. Representatives of the Air Line Pilots Association, which had threatened to strike at 12:01 a.m. Monday. did not immediately return a call seeking comment

Glynn said the airline canceled Monday's flights to ensure that its customers and employees are taken care of in the event union leadership chooses to call for a work stoppage

The cancellation involved flights scheduled from 6 a.m. through 6 p.m. Monday, about 750 of the airline's 815 daily departures in a system that serves some 25,000 passengers daily.

The company said it would announce later what it will do about flights scheduled after that.

Glynn said Comair would try to provide customers with alternative transportation on its parent, Delta Air Lines, or other airlines.

The company had canceled 7 percent of its daily flights Thursday and 13 percent of its weekend schedule of 100 flights a day.

President Bush, who intervened earlier this month in a dispute between Northwest Airlines and its mechanics, hadn't indicated if he would get involved.

Bush could appoint an emergency board that would extend the coolingoff period 60 days and make recommendations on a contract.

Comair's 1,350 pilots want a company-funded retirement plan. higher pay, more rest between flights and pay for hours they spend working, not just flying.

A contract offer that pilots rejected a week ago would have given them a company-funded retirement program, which was extended last year to Comair's other employees. It also would have increased the pay of top-scale pilots from $66,000 to $96,000.

However, only about 40 Comair pilots who have at least 18 years of experience would have been eligible for the salary boost, union spokesman Paul Lackie said. The airline has 420 pilots with two years of experience or less who earn less than $30,000

Knight accepts Texas Tech job

The Associated Press

ATLANTA - When it comes to tempers, Temple coach John Chaney considers himself right up there with Bob Knight. That's why Chaney is glad to see Knight will get a second chance at Texas Tech.

Chaney, Michigan State coach Tom Izzo and Roy Williams of Kansas were among the coaches still alive in the NCAA tournament who were more than happy to see Knight re-entering their exclusive

The former Indiana coach, who was ousted for a pattern of unacceptable behavior, was introduced as Texas Tech's coach Friday.

"I think Bobby Knight needs to be involved in coaching." Chaney

"A guy's involved with sports for 35 years, and someone takes a snapshot at one part of that body of work, and starts flashing it over and over. I do feel that's unfair."

Izzo has been at Michigan State since 1995 and watched the end of Knight's era at Indiana unfold. Even though Knight was a Big Ten rival, Izzo said it was uncomfortable to witness his demise.

"I'm sure he made some mistakes at times," Izzo said. "But I'm sure some things were blown out of proportion. He's a great coach. He knows how to motivate kids, and he runs a clean program.

Of course, Izzo no longer has to worry about recruiting against Knight or playing him twice a

Now, that's a concern of Williams, who soon could have a new Big 12 power to worry about.

Even before officially getting the job, Knight reportedly was already checking out talent this week, looking at junior college players who might make next season's team better.

"Coach Knight is a real good friend," Williams said, "We have beaten them five of the six times we've played, and he has still been tremendously nice to me. He's been a great coach and a great teacher of coaches. He will be nothing but great for our confer-

Texas Tech has little basketball tradition - pockets of success folded into an overall history of disappointment.

The Red Raiders went 30-2 in 1995-96, but the program fell apart shortly thereafter because of NCAA sanctions that stripped the school of nine scholarships over four seasons. Attendance dropped Fellow coaches see Knight's hiring as a way to restore legitimacy and bring back fans.

"Obviously, some things have been magnified that haven't been positive in the eyes of many," Illinois coach Bill Self said.

But still, I think he brings instant credibility from a recruiting standpoint, a monetary standpoint, an exposure stand-

Chaney said he believes Knight's talents are being wasted out of coaching.

A tough disciplinarian also known for outrageous behavior after a game in 1994, he charged UMass coach John Calipari and said "I'll kill you!" - Chaney welcomes his friend back into the

"I think he needs to be in a situation where somebody's going to count on him, and somebody's going to need him once again." Chaney said. "I think he's a fine teacher, and I think wherever he goes, they'll find that he does a to 5-5 overall and 2-1 in conference

In the second match of the road trip, K-State narrowly lost to Fresno State, 4-3. Once again, the Cats lost the top-two singles matches but did earn victories at the No. 3, 4 and 6 spots from Eva Novotna, Kathy Chuda and Hayley McIver. Unfortunately for K-State, though,

Fresno State swept doubles play and carned what would be the deciding

The win improved Fresno State to 10-2 overall and dropped the Cats to 5-6 on the season.

The Cats finished their spring break trip at the University of Pacific on Wednesday. Unlike the previous two matches, though, this contest decidedly would go K-State's way. Bietau earned his 150th career victory as the Cats rolled over Pacific 7-0.

The Cats won all six singles and two of the three doubles matches. Their lone loss came at No. 3 doubles, when Castillejos and McIver lost to Susanne Bertel and Sandija Zarina 8-3.

K-State will return to action at 10 a.m. next Saturday with a home match against Colorado.

the title game. The team draws experience from starters Charlie Bell, David Thomas and Andre Hutson, all in their third Final Four. Michigan State also showed it can play against any defense after beating Temple's matchup zone Sunday. Plus, Arizona has to be banged up from the bruising battle against Illinois.

So, everybody enjoy what little left we have of this college hoops season - I know I will. Even if Michigan State loses, I will be OK because it will warm up outside, and those crater-sized potholes will be fixed soon, right?

HEARTBROKEN

Lead actresses shine in sub-par movie

Say what you will, Sigourney Weaver has had a tough decade as far as her acting career goes, but she's still one of my favorite actresses.

In her latest film, "Heartbreakers," Weaver ("Ghostbusters." "Alien") shares the screen with Jennifer Love Hewitt ("I Know What You Did Last Summer") as a mother-daughter conwomen team who ensnares rich men, marries them, cons them into committing adultery on one member of the duo and gets the poor sap for all he's worth in the divorce settlement. Among the suckers is Ray Liotta ("Hannibal")

In the mother of all cons, Weaver tries to woo an old tobacco industry tycoon, played by Gene Hackman ("Superman"), while Hewitt tries to con a soon-to-be-rich bartender (Jason Lee, "Dogma") and not fall in love with him in the process.

This type of plot has been done before, but the chemistry between Weaver and Hewitt makes it seem Iresh and new. Both actresses play off each other fantastically, and they seem to be both lovable and despicable at the same time. Hackman looks just plain old, whether this is intended in the film or not, and his part is rather small. The same goes for Lee, whose sweeterthan-molasses character is two-dimensional and hollow.

It is the women who dominate the screen, and it is they who make the movie bearable and almost funny. If you concentrate too much on these two, though, you might miss a few surprises: for instance. Carrie Fisher (Princess Leia of "Star Wars" fame) makes a cameo appearance as

Weaver's attorney

More than anything, audiences will flock to this film for the proverbial eye candy. Hewitt's waif-like frame is stuffed into as many tight, form-fitting outfits as possible, and Weaver looks to be her physical equal. For a woman her age (Weaver now is in her early 50s). Weaver has kept her body in shape, and some might even think she is Hewitt's match.

The bodies of these actresses, though, couldn't save the movie itself. Though it has extremely lunny moments, the talent of the actors and actresses in this movie is wasted. Sadly, it is another case of great actors who sold out and have settled for mediocre storylines.

Hopefully, the box office grosses will tell the tale, and something better will come along for Weaver. Now, all we have to do is hold our breath for the fifth installment in the "Alien" saga.

Daybirds releases pop-driven debut

"TURNSTYLE"

MUSIC REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN

Eighteen tracks of power pop so sweet you have to brush your teeth after indulging in the sound is what The Daybirds' album, "Turnstyle" is all about.

Hailing from Liberty, Mo., The Daybirds weave pop melodies and falsetto harmonies into a style as talented and bright as the band name

"Turnstyle" is a journey through the kind of tortured romantic style that should be familiar to fans of midwestern pop like The Getup Kids. Still, the music has a unique sound with plenty of piano and dual harmonies.

With the same vocal range, pop sound and piano accompaniment,

This is a band that writes the ac strictly for the sake of the s Then every now and then it weaves in things like a French horn solo or the backward-recorded guitar solo on "Katherine Girl," if it adds to the song.

Tight editing with an average track three minutes keeps the songs from getting boring, but the another problem with the album.

Only a few songs actually stand out from the whole album because they all sound so similar.

The Daybirds don't just stick to its formula, the band clings to it with a vengeance.

At least the style works for them. Turnstyle" is an album that is easy to listen to, and emo fans will be able to relate to the attitude of the pop sound. It will be interesting to hear this band develop on its next release.

After all, with an album with as much promise as "Turnstyle," it sounds like it'll be together for a

Film's historical value outweighs few shortcomings

Since "Saving Private Ryan" hit theaters a few years ago, and the highly anticipated "Pearl Harbor" is slated to open nationwide May 25, a newfound interest in war movies has surfaced with the American public

The latest installment in this popular genre is "Enemy at the Gates," a war thriller starring Jude Law ("The Talented Mr. Ripley") as a Russian soldier during World War II who clashes against Ed Harris ("Apollo 13"), a Nazi agent sent to kill him. Law's character quickly is immortal-

(Joseph Fiennes, "Shakespeare in Love") who also has his eye on said hero's love interest (Rachel Weisz, "The Mummy"). Superb additions to the cast include Bob Hoskins ("Who Framed Roger Rabbit?") as a young Nikita Khrushchev, before his days as a Russian premier.

Those uninterested in the historical aspects will see the movie for its numerous gory scenes and frank depic tion of the harsh realities of war. World War II veterans and history buffs, though, will praise the film because it is able to transport audiences to a dark time in the history of the world that just might spark added interest in the war itself.

The acting is superb, and the onlocation filming really does give the feel of being in the middle of the action. One nagging aspect still sticks out, though.

The casting of British actors in Russian roles is painfully noticeable, as is an American actor portraying a Nazi their own accents, and they fail to adopt the tongue of the countries from which their characters hail. Hearing a British actor, for instance, say the word "comrade" in a British accent when playing a Russian soldier just kills the mood. If you can, think of Kevin Costner's performance as the title role in 1991's "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," and you'll have an idea of what it's like.

The actors make no attempt to hide

Despite the film's single huge shortcoming, though, the historical accuracy and edge-of-your-seat battle sequences are sure to thrill even the most discrimi-

When she first moved to Manhattan to start school, she said she wasn't working, and carrying a piece of plastic was too easy of a way to buy.

"I didn't have a job and had little money coming in, but there was still stuff I wanted," Musquiz. said. "I just charged everything."

Musquiz got her first credit card in August, which was her first semester at K-State.

She's acquired two more since then.

She said the offers kept coming in the mail, and she finally gave into them.

She decided that having a credit card to use in emergencies was a good idea. Her good idea, she said, might not have been as good as she thought.

"I was going to keep a card for emergencies," Musquiz said. "But now I just charge things when I don't have money.'

Fred Smith, accounting instructor, said credit cards are easily accessible to students, which means debt is just around the corner.

"Credit cards are targeting students who don't always understand the terms," Smith said. "It's too easy to run up a debt that you can't handle.'

Smith said students get themselves into trouble when they buy what they can't afford. Smith said a credit card doesn't expand your buying ability.

"Say, perhaps, you want a stereo, but you don't have the money for it. Just because you charge it doesn't mean that you can afford it," Smith said.

"You have to pay for it sometime.

Smith said that merely making minimum payments on credit cards doesn't get students out of the pit, either.

He said that if someone made minimum payments on a $2,000 credit card debt at 20 percent interest, it would take 31 years and two months to pay it off.

Musquiz says she has every intention of paying her cards off as soon as possible. She said she is charging less frequently lately, because the payments are getting

Other students have found themselves in the same situation. When payments get out of control they realize they are buying more than they can afford.

Jennifer Bowman, senior in accounting and managament information systems, said spur-ofthe-moment shopping became a problem when she was using her credit cards in the beginning.

"I was buying more than I would have if I was paying for everything with cash," Bowman said. "I finally realized that I was going to have to have the money to pay the cards off.

Smith said the most important thing for students to remember is that they will have to pay for what they charge.

"You can't borrow from the future to consume now," Smith said. "You'll end up digging yourself into a bottomless pit of Amy said having so much experience with credit cards has taught her one of life's most important lessons - nothing ever is as good as it seems.

"Charging things looks easy. but it's been hard and discouraging for me to pay for everything I charged," Amy said. "I make the minimum monthly payments, so I have excellent credit, but no money, so I guess it doesn't

Despite nobody in the group bringing home the jackpot. Meyer and Dusin said they enjoyed the different atmosphere Las Vegas offered compared to the beach

"So much happened." Meyer said. "It is a good senior spring break. It was awesome.

Las Vegas wasn't on the list of hot spots for AAA Travel. Teri Berry. travel consultant for AAA, said Cancun, South Padre and Montego Bay, Jamaica, were highly requested.

"It's the party atmosphere and warm weather," Berry said.

Berry said she was surprised by all of the last-minute travelers.

"We had people coming in on the Thursday and Friday before spring break," she said. "I guess college students don't pre-plan as much as the established family does.

Pearson said spring break means lots of business for travel

"It livens up considerably," he said. "There's quite a bit of business from spring break travelers."

The spring break planning season generally begins in September, and Pearson said the number of students longing to leave Manhattan were just as high as in previous years.

Dittman said more people are starting to be more independent with their travels, as opposed to purchasing packaged trips. But travel agencies still are a good link in the trip-planning chain, Dittman

"We try to provide travel advice, as well as safety tips," she said. "We can get the research done in a timely manner.'

Bramlage donated land to the city for Bramlage Park and the Bramlage Foundation has continued to support the park.

Other donations from the Bramlages include land for a YMCA, buildings housing the Geary County Historical Society, a VFW post and a senior citizens' housing project.

Dorothy Bramlage was preceded in death by her husband and a son.

She is survived by a son, E. Robert Bramlage, Manhattan; a daughter, Dorothy Willcoxon, Joplin, Mo.; eight grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

"I saw the trailer for 'Dude, Where's My Car?' and it ruined it for me," he said, drawing big laughs. "Maybe that's not fair because I had read the book.

He said being the host of the Oscars is "like making love to a beautiful woman. It's something I only get to do when Billy Crystal's out of town."

Among other winners, "U-571" won for sound editing and "Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas" for makeup.

In the documentary categories, "Into the Arms of Strangers: Stories of the Kindertransport" won the feature Oscar, and "Big Mama" received the short subject honor.

The animated short film Oscar went to "Father and Daughter," and the live-action short film honor was picked up by "Quiero Ser (I Want to Bob Dylan won the best-song Oscar for the rollicking "Things Have Changed." the tune he wrote for the quirky campus drama "Wonder Boys.

"Oh good God, this is amazing," Dylan said.

The show started with more than the usual aura of excitement.

The reason: Few of the majorcategory nominees appeared to be a slam-dunk.

For two of the past three years, winners for best picture- "Titanic" and "American Beauty" — emerged as strong favorites before the ceremony. In 1999, "Shakespeare in Love" edged out early favorite "Saving Private Ryan."

This year, "Gladiator," with its 12 nominations and huge theater grosses, might have been considered a cinch for multiple Oscars. But there was considerable support among Academy voters for "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" and "Traffic," two films that seemed more innovative than the traditional sword-and-toga "Gladiator."

"Erin Brockovich" and "Chocolat" were well-liked, but were not considered likely winners.

Oscar ballots were mailed to the roughly 5,700 Academy members, who nominate in their own categories - such as actors voting for actors. All may nominate for hest picture.

Most of the final awards are voted on by all members. The exceptions: members may vote for the short, documentary and foreign language films only if they can certify that they have seen all the nominees.

Sunday night marked a farewell to the venerable Shrine . Next year, the Academy Awards will move to the 3,300-seat Kodak Theater in the heart of Hollywood.

Legislator tries to stop credit card soliciting

Kansas State Collegian

Rep. Rocky Nichols, D-Topeka, is asking questions no one will answer. The introduction of a bill in the Kansas Legislature that would make credit card solicitation and the selling of student and university employee names illegal started his quest for answers.

Credit-card solicitation on campus has become a hot topic, and Nichols said he believes students are the victims in the multimillion dollar credit card industry. But Nichols is waiting for information to surface about credit-card contracts and student applications. Nevertheless, Alumni Associations at three Kansas universities and their credit partners aren't talking. "I don't have any straight answers on how much of this activity is going on at Kansas universities, but I have concerns that operations such as these don't make students the top priority," Nichols said. series about credit cards. See Wednesday's The bill was paper for a story about endorsed by the credit-card company education budget money-making schemes

The KSU Alumni Association had addressed concerns to Nichols that if the bill passed, they might lose important revenue. The committee wanted to know what kind of figures they were dealing with.

"They refused to give us any numbers. They flat out said 'no.' That's not a good situation," Nichols said. "The information that we do have is that the contract is in the ballpark of seven figures. That could mean anything from $1 million to $9 million."

The Alumni Association has a 12-year contract with Intrust Bank. The contract allows Intrust to market its credit card to K-State students, employees and alumni, The contract initially was signed in 1988. After the 12-year contract expired, it was renegotiated. This year is the fourth year of the new contract.

Amy Renz, Alumni Association president, said the terms of the contract cannot be released.

"The royalty payments from the contract with Intrust bank allow us to provide support to university programs and scholarships," Renz said. "We were looking for additional revenue, and we've been able to get that. People use this card and, in turn, support the association."

The same information was requested from other universities with similar contracts with Intrust Bank, Alumni associations at the University of Kansas and Wichita State University also refused to provide the information, Nichols said.

Linda Collinan, vice president of credit card marketing at Intrust Bank, said it is common that terms of contracts are not

Season-ticket holders required to give a little more potball season-ticket holders might have to reach a little deeper into their pocketbooks come the 2002 season if they intend on keeping premium seats in KSU Stadium.

This isn't due to escalating ticket prices,

Instead, K-State fans with seats virtually anywhere between the yard markers, excluding the student sections, will be required to make minimum annual donations to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund.

Those donation amounts, ranging from $75 to $1,000 per seat, depending on the proximity to the 50-yard line, as well as terms of the new policy, were mailed to current season-ticket holders by the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics earlier this month.

The deadline for new donors to meet the required donation levels is May 1, 2002.

Resorting to such a system has become necessary for budgetary reasons, Athletics Director Max Urick said, as the annual funding needed to support K-State's 16 intercollegiate programs continues to rise. These are policy changes that need to be made for the long-term because the cost of athletics is not going to decrease in the future," Urick said. "So you have to position yourself to meet ongoing increases."

Those increases include a projected 3.5percent inflation on K-State's $23 million athletic budget, which ranks as the eighth highest in the Big 12 Conference. That inflation rate, based on the increase of salaries, travel and scholarships related to Wildcat athletics, is expected to make the athletic department account for approximately $805,000 next year just to maintain an even keel - in other words, not improve anything in the athletic program.

As a result, K-State Development Officer Kathy Duggan said the decision to implement a donation requirement for season football tickets was financially driven.

"We looked at increasing ticket prices, which went up a little bit this year, but that wouldn't cover what we need to do," Duggan said. "So with the inflation next Controversy has arisen among Wildcat faithful surrounding the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics policy changes for the future football campaigns.

Required minimum donations for season-ticket holders beginning in 2002. as well as the elimination of the family ticket plan this year, has left K-State supporters with mixed feelings, Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said.

"This is a popular topic because we have the toll-free number at the Ticket Office, and we're kind of the sounding board for everybody when it comes to tickets because that's where they do come in," Adolph said.

There's been some upset people, but I think most everybody realizes that we're going to have to do something if we're going to stay in the Big 12 and compete with the test of the schools."

Yet the loss of the family plan might have rendered the most pessimistic reactions.

Athletics Director Max Urick said the family plan was instituted six or seven years ago. The package included four season tickets for the price of two in Sections 12-14. Families could purchase two adult season tickets and receive two children's tickets free.

Urick said the family plan was capped at 855 patrons each year, which meant the athletic department gave away 1,700 free tickets per season. accounting for $400,000 of lost revenue.

"That's a pretty significant amount," Urick said. "But these decisions were really difficult decisions to make - we really reluctantly make those.

"And I understand and feel for the people that bought those and their disappointment and the adjustments that they have to make, but the alternatives simply aren't very apparent."

Brad Deustch, a Wichita native, was one of the many individuals who had to make such an adjustment. Deustch had been buying season tickets for nine years and had enjoyed the benefits of

City commissioner Peak withdraws from election; name to stay on ballot

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

If recent reports are accurate, the pool of candidates for the Manhattan City Commission has shrunk to five. According to a story in Sunday's Manhattan Mercury, Commissioner Carol Peak has withdrawn from the recent race for three open commission seats. In the article, Peak cited time commitments as her reason for not running again. She was unavailable for comment.

Riley County Clerk Rich Vargo said he was as surprised as anyone, finding out from the newspaper.

Unfortunately, since Peak's resignation comes after the Jan. 23 withdrawal deadline, Vargo said her name will remain on the April 3 ballot whether she wants the job or not.

"Our jobs are just to put people on the ballot and tabulate the results," he said.

According to election rules, the two candidates with the most votes each receive four-year terms and the third will receive a two-year term. City Attorney Bill Frost said Peak still might be on the ballot, but even if she ends up in the top three, she still could resign.

"The remaining members would elect someone to serve out the remainder of the term," he said.

According to state statute, Frost said the two other newly elected commissioners and the two sitting commissioners would select Peak's replacement, who merely needs to satisfy basic residence and age requirements.

Frost said the replacement then would serve for two years until the next commission election, regardless of whether Peak came in first, second or third in the race.

Regardless, Sammi Mangus, assistant to the city manager, said Peak's resignation does not change her duties or privileges for her current commission term until winning candidates take their seats April 17.

News of the weird

In February, Girl Scout officials of the San Jacinto Council near Houston announced that this year's father-daughter event would be a "pajama party" dance in which fathers and the girls, aged 11-17, would come dressed in sleepwear; after some complaints ("It would attract every pervert in the city," one mother said), the council changed the dress code to sweatsuits. And The Tennessean newspaper reported in November that the longstanding Halloween tradition of the Morris Levine family near Nashville, to hand out gift "daddy bags" to fathers accompanying trick-or-treaters, was not well-received by all parents because some of the bags contained copies of Penthouse and Hustler.

Pilots for Comair strike for 1st time in 24 years

HEBRON, Ky. - A strike by Comair pilots Monday forced the nation's second-largest regional airline to cancel hundreds of flights and left passengers scrambling to book new travel arrangements.

In red letters, the word "canceled" appeared across Comair's arrival and departure boards at the Cincinnati-Northern Kentucky airport, the airline's main hub.

"I had a backup plan," said Suzanne DeKoch of Greenville, S.C., who was visiting Cincinnati and switched from Comair to Delta on Saturday, "It seemed like a wise

The strike is the first against Comair in its 24-year history. The airline had warned of the cancellations Sunday, and many of its passengers transferred to other airlines, including Comair's corporate parent, Delta.

Bush promotes tax cut to strengthen economy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - President Bush touted small-business aspects of his tax-cut plan Monday as his chief spokesman said the United States is "in the middle of an economic downturn" that requires Bush's prescription of tax reductions and budget tightening.

Asked whether he agreed with spokesman Ari Fleischer's use of the word "downturn," Bush told reporters: "Let the numbers speak for themselves."

"I believe the economy has slowed down and we better do something about it," Bush said, "I'm confident if we do the right thing. we can have economic growth, the likes of which we had in the past."

Most analysts agree the economy has slowed considerably from its blistering growth of the past decade, but few are saying that growth has stopped altogether.

Bush launched a two-day, threestate trip to promote his tax cut and budget proposals at a greeting card company he said exemplifies the kind of business that would benefit. - The Associated Press

Army plane crash kills 2 U.S. pilots in Germany

WASHINGTON, D.C. - An Army reconnaissance plane crashed Monday in Germany, killing two people on board, U.S. officials said.

Details were sketchy, but officials said the plane crashed in a forest near the town of Schwabach, about eight miles southwest of Nuremberg.

The two pilots died," said Hilde

Patton, a spokeswoman at the Army's V Corps headquarters in Heidelberg, Germany. She said their remains had not yet been recovered from the aircraft.

Patton said the aircraft was an RC-12, a twin-propeller plane that operates the Guardrail electronic intelligence collection system. It is used to detect, identify and precisely locate potentially hostile sources of communications, radars and other electronic signals.

Patton said the RC-12 was on a training flight from an Army airfield at Wieshaden. It was assigned to the 205th Military Intelligence Brigade at Wiesbaden.

The accident happened about 4 p.m. local time. Patton said there was no indication of what caused the crash. German and American authorities are investigating.

K-State design ranks 3rd nationally

By KECIA N. SEYB Kansas State Collegian

Interior designers and interior architects graduating from K-State have been giving the university's programs a good name. K-State ranked third among design schools in providing the nation's leading firms with the best employees. Design Intelligence and the Almanac of Architecture and Design 2001 asked more than 300 of the nation's leading interior design and interior architecture firms to name the design schools that have provided the best employees in the last 10 years. K-State placed third behind the University of Cincinnati and the Pratt

Gwen O'Neal, head of the Department of Apparel, Textiles and Interior Design, said many factors contributed to K-State students becoming some of the best employees.

"We have been successful at enrolling some very good students. and we have very competent, dedicated faculty who provide the kind of instruction, leadership and direction for the students, such that the students are able to develop their potentials to the fullest," she said.

Stephen Murphy, professor and head of the Department of Interior Architecture, said the reasons for K-State interior architect students becoming exemplary employees is twofold.

"First, you have to develop a good curriculum and dedicated faculty," he said. 'The second thing is recruiting the students - you have to have outstanding students to have outstanding employees later on."

Schools could be included in the survey if they offered Foundation for Interior Design Education Research accredited programs, which slims down the number who qualify, said Ludwig Villasi, assistant professor of apparel, textiles and interior design.

There are over 600 design programs. Only 96 out of that 600plus are accredited, so you can see the elite group that the students are in."

Villasi said students receive professional preparation in the interior design and interior architecture programs.

"They have the ability to jump right into the profession and do the work," he said

K-State is unique, Villasi said, because there is only one other university, Syracuse University, that has two interior programs on campus. both of which are FIDER accredited.

The object of the FIDER organization is, every six years, they come on site, and we have a very extensive two-day program review, and essentially, that keeps the quality at the level that it is," Villasi said.

The interior architecture program at K-State is a live-year program. which consists of courses in furniture design, product design, environmental systems and structures. Students in the program either can study abroad or complete a 30-week internship with a professional firm.

The interior design program is a four-year program that is fine-arts based and includes supervised internships and study tours abroad and in the United States.

Chris Heeley, fifth-year senior in interior architecture, said he has been very impressed with K-State's interior architecture program.

"I actually started out in the Department of Architecture," he said. "I was impressed with the interior architecture department and changed during my second year."

Heeley did his 30-week internship in Orlando, Fla., working with multimillion-dollar houses. Although he is graduating in May, Heeley said he still has not decided on the firm with which he would like to work.

"I'm looking for that right fit in the firm, probably the Florida or southeast area," he said.

Heeley shouldn't be lacking on job offers, as Murphy said that, generally. each student receives three to five job offers - in his or her choice location.

"Our program has been strong from the beginning," he said. "Our students have received a high salary right out of college

Heeley said he is a little surprised at the two design programs' high ranking because of the size of the school. He said, however, he thinks the students perhaps are better prepared than others for the professional world

"I think the quality speaks for itself," he said.

Campaign fund-raising amendment defeated

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Taking time from a debate over campaign finance legislation, the Senate rejected a constitutional amendment Monday to allow sweeping changes in the current fund-raising system after critics said it would infringe on freespeech guarantees in the Constitution.

The proposed amendment was defeated, 56-40, far short of the twothirds majority approval needed, and came despite impassioned senatorial denunciations of the current money chase as putrid, obscene and a threat to the nation's long-term stability.

The proposal, by Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., was designed to negate a Supreme Court ruling a quarter-century ago that struck down key parts of a Watergate-era political reform effort. The ruling complicates the current attempt by Sens. John McCain, Russ Feingold and others to curtail the role of money in politics.

Debate on that bill resumed within minutes of the vote on the amendment, and a series of key test votes was expected to begin as early as Tuesday.

Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky, led the attack on Hollings' proposal, saying it reaches right in and rips the heart out of the First Amendment. Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., said the system was obscene, and said the Supreme Court relied on flawed logic when it ruled in 1976 that money was the same as free speech when it came to politics.

Hollings said senators spend so much time raising campaign money that it interferes with their jobs. "Welcome to the $7 million club, because that's the cost of the average campaign in order to become a U.S. senator," he said.

"The current system is rotten. It's putrid. It stinks," said Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va. Without a change, he said, it will eventually undermine the very foundation of this Republic. The amendment was debated as a

and Feingold, D-Wis. That measure would ban so-called soft money, the unlimited, loosely regulated donations that flow to the political parties. It also would place restrictions on certain paid broadcast advertising during the weeks leading to elections.

An important test vote was likely Tuesday, as Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., sought support for an approach to limit soft money without banning it. His proposal also would raise the limits on individual donations to candidates and parties, restrictions which have remained unchanged since the 1970s.

McCain told reporters, "I think we have the vote to defeat" Hagel's proposal.

He and his allies have criticized Hagel's legislation for failing to crack down on soft money donations to state parties.

In reply, the Nebraska senator recently added a provision requiring that soft money would have to be combined with hard money - more difficult to raise because donations are limited in size-before it could be spent in connection with federal campaigns.

McCain, Feingold and their allies must confront other issues as they struggle to win approval for their bill.

In addition to the current $1,000 limit on individual donations to candidates, current law restricts donors to a total of $25,000 a year in so-called hard money to all recipients Democrats are split over how large an increase to permit, and the party's Senate leader, Sen. Tom Daschle of South Dakota, said he fears Republicans could gain a significant advantage if it is raised too high.

Another thorny issue relates to an expected legal challenge to any bill that passes. McCain, Feingold and others favor a provision to let the Supreme Court rule on each campaign restriction separately. Others argue the court should take an all-or-nothing approach, since the result otherwise could be a system that Congress never "Gladiator" wins best picture. What's next? "Armageddon" for movie of the century?

To that person who was complaining about the people holding hands on campus, I hope those couples are still holding hands when they are celebrating their 50th anniversary. That's love. Why don't you get over the pessimistic look that you have on life?

I love the new automatic water fountains outside the Union.

I would just like to say thank you to whoever it was that decided to start jack hammering outside the residence halls on the east side of campus at 9:30 in the morning. I don't have a class until 11:30, and I got woke up by the sound of jack hammers. Thanks a lot, K-State.

To the person that called in about holding hands on campus, it's not our fault that you hate your parents.

Hey, how was your break? Awww. Shut

I have two tests this week. Walking out of class today, I turn on my Walkman. 91.9 is playing Cake's "Sheep Go to Heaven, Goats Go to Hell." Everything is going to be all right.

To all of you who don't like seeing couples holding hands on campus, perhaps you are just bitter because you can't find anyone to put up with that kind of attitude long enough to get to the holding of hands on campus stage.

We are not in junior high anymore, so we don't care about people holding hands on campus.

My girlfriend wet the bed in Jamaica. My roommate got a 17-year-old pregnant in Cancun. What did you do for spring break?

In response to the person who was holding hands, if this isn't high school, then what do you care what other people do?

People here are so boring. Really,

I would just love to give Parking Services a thumbs up. You missed six whole cars in the Derby lot when you were ticketing. Thanks.

If, however, you can afford to spend a couple of bucks to get there, you'll find any number of great activities. You can visit Vanderbilt's Western Wear and admire the boots and belt buckles there, or you can go look at the outside of the missile silo that once contained the world's largest LSD lab. Later, you can hang out with the cool kids down at Sonic or admire the statuesque windmill in the park.

The bison aren't as good company as they used to be before the advent of cable television, but they're still pretty entertaining.

All of the activities I've listed here have two things in common: they're cheap, and they either can be intensely boring or remarkably entertaining, depending on what you put into them. President's actions contradict campaign rhetoric

VINCE JACOBSON/Collegian

"Every environmental issue confronts us with a duty to be good stewards... As we use nature's gifts, we must do so wisely. Prosperity will mean little if we leave future generations a world of polluted air, toxic lakes and rivers, and vanished forests." - presidential candidate George W. Bush, April 3,

Bush also said during his greener-than-thou moments on the campaign that, unlike Al Gore, who would encourage voluntary reductions of carbon dioxide (the primary gas implicated in global warming), he favored mandatory carbon dioxide reductions from power plants. Bush declared he would be the environmental president.

This was from a campaign that claimed that Gore would say anything to get elected. It's a statement to the obvious that Bush's ruinous environmental policies as Texas governor would carry over into his presidency.

It was under Bush's stewardship as governor that Texas became the most polluted state in the nation.

1999 was the year in which Houston surpassed Los Angeles as being the smoggiest city in the United States

According to the Sierra Club,

Texas ranked first among all states in smog alerts, in discharges of recognized carcinogens into the air, in the number of factories violating

DAVID LEVIN clean-water standards, in the injection of toxic waste into underground wells and in toxic chemical accidents.

As governor, Bush appointed an ex-chemical company executive to the Texas Natural Resources and Conservation Commission, the state's version of the Environmental Protection Agency. Bush also repealed mandatory emission testing for motor vehicles.

Now, it's roughly two months into the Republican takeover of the federal government, and what has happened?

Bush (who himself was involved in hig oil) appointed Vice President Dick Cheney, a former executive to the oil industry service company Halliburton, to head the presidential task force on energy.

Andrew Card, who was the auto industry's chief lobbyist against global warming and fuel efficiency standards, now is the White House chief of staff. In the House of Representatives, air quality issues were moved from the subcommittee on Health and Environment to the Commerce Committee's new subcommittee on Energy and Air Quality.

Bush says he's considering suspending some of the regulations that protected one-third of the nation's forests from logging and road construction. The Bureau of Land Management proposed a scaling back of rules that toughened environmental standards for hard-rock mining and made it more difficult for mining companies that violated anti-pollution laws to evade financial liability.

Bush's energy policy consists of exploiting the oil and natural gas resources of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and other federally protected lands and to have an increased reliance on coal, the dirtiest of

Then there's Bush's gift to big energy by breaking his campaign promise to reduce power plant carbon dioxide emissions (36 percent of U.S. carbon dioxide emissions come from coal-fired

Some in government and industry who support Bush's carbon dioxide reversal try to pass it off as no big deal. Carbon dioxide is just a natural byproduct of all living things, right? Well, so is poop, but we don't go around crapping in the

In a UN report released last month, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and most climatologists agree that global warming is occurring and the burning of fossil fuels that release greenhouse gasses, primarily carbon dioxide, is the main culprit. What's in dispute is how bad the catastrophe is going to be.

The rolling blackouts in California and higher energy prices are an indication that there is an energy supply problem. The Republican solution is a more aggressive search for fossil fuels and a weakening of environmental standards.

At what point do we start caring about the consequences of these actions? At what point do we start worrying that these resources are limited?

Times are relatively good now. It would be easier and cheaper to address these issues now then to wait until we're deep in a true crisis.

Instead of a $1.6 trillion tax cut, suppose we make it $1.5 trillion and take that $100 billion and use it for grants to research institutions and industries to discover alternative energy sources or making our current energy uses more efficient and clean. According to the latest Harper's Index, the daily amount of U.S. oil consumption saved by increasing SUV's fuel efficiency 3 mpg would amount to 7 million gallons more than the White House's numbers for the projected daily oil yield from ANWR.

It's unfortunate that the president doesn't get it. Perhaps it would help if we all mail Bush a copy of Dr. Seuss' "The Lorax." That should be about his speed.

Red Cross volunteer aids victims

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Renee Spurlock, Red Cross volunteer, finds beauty in disaster.

"It is absolutely terrifying when we have to go out on a disaster," she said. "No one knows what is going to happen next, but the way everyone pulls together is just beautiful. It makes it worth it."

Spurlock, who has been a Red Cross disaster volunteer for 15 years, worked in Hutchinson, Kan., during the natural gas explosions early this year.

"All of the sudden they were in frightful shape," she said. "They needed immediate help, and Red Cross provided that."

Clay Myers-Bowman, executive director of the Manhattan chapter, said the Red Cross moves in two stages. The first phase provides mass care to the community.

"We go in and set up emergency shelters and provide food to the victims," Myers-Bowman said. "At any one time there are hundreds of shelters open across the nation."

In Hutchinson, the Red Cross opened the Kansas State Fairgrounds Encampment Building for families who were displaced because of the explosions.

The second phase, called family services, is the area that Spurlock volunteers in.

"I try and get to know the victims individually," Spurlock said. "My job is to help them get the necessities back. A lot of these people we ordered to evacuate their house immediately, causing them to leave with nothing but their pajamas and slippers on."

Spurlock helped the victims find places to live and then gave them dispensing orders, certificates to use at local stores to purchase necessities like clothing, toiletries and bedding.

"We try and make it as good as we can as fast as we can," she said. "It is a push towards normalness, or the closest we can come to it."

Spurlock said one of the toughest parts of her job was seeing the distress of the victims during their displacement.

"At first they were simply stunned," she said, "but terribly hopeful. However, as time drug on, and the problem wasn't being resolved, it began to be stressful to the victims. That was hard to watch."

The beauty of the disaster,
Spurlock said, was seeing the victims and the community pull together.

"I can't say any of it was enjoyable," she said, "but the people, God bless them, were wonderful. They were all pulling for each other, and the community was right behind them supporting them all the way. It was a great thing to see."

Myers-Bowman said Spurlock is one of a handful of volunteers in the area who is qualified for these types of disasters.

"She is a very vital part of our organization," he said. "Renee has been doing this a long time, and she knows what she is doing. I can count on her to keep me and the organization on track."

Spurlock started volunteering as a way for her and her late husband, Norman, to give back to the community together.

"We were at a point in our life where we both had the time and the health," she said. "There is not always a window available in your life when you can give your time like this, so we took advantage of it."

The Spurlocks traveled to various places in the United States and Puerto Rico volunteering with the Red Cross Disaster Team, until Norman's death in June 1998.

"I just started doing local disasters then," she said. "I had family here, and it was too hard to travel at the time."

Hutchinson, where she spent close to three weeks, was Spurlock's first traveling assignment, Myers-Bowman said.

"She was a perfect representative for the Red Cross in Hutchinson," he said. "Renee is a wonderful, positive, upbeat person. She has been doing this a long time, and she is very helpful to the victims. She gets to know them personally and cares about their experiences."

Spurlock said even though the explosions in Hutchinson scared her, she is ready to keep traveling as part of the disaster team.

"It is scary," she said, "but it isnice to see the end result. I have learned just to put my shoulder to the wheel and push right along with the victims and the community. They are the driving force behind the healing. I am just there to lend my support."

Legislature begins work on state budget

By JOHN HANNA

The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House kicked off this week's work on the state budget by giving tentative approval Monday to a bill outlining capital improvement projects with little debate.

The House's voice vote advanced the bill to final action. Passage, expected Tuesday, would send the legislation to the Senate.

The bill would set aside nearly $110 million for construction and renovation projects during the state's 2002 fiscal year.

It was the first of three budget bills House members were supposed to tackle this week. Another made changes to the state's current budget, and the third contained most of the state's 2002 budget.

The Senate approved its capital improvements bill Friday on a 38-1 vote, but it also planned to debate other budget legislation this week.

Gov. Bill Graves proposed a $9.15 billion state budget for fiscal 2002, one that would keep spending about the same as in fiscal 2001.

About $4.6 billion in spending under Graves' proposals would come from the state general fund. It is the largest source of money for Kansas government programs and where the state deposits most of its tax revenues.

The spending recommended by the House Appropriations and Senate Ways and Means committees throughout the session is close to the governor's proposals, in part because legislators aren't certain about the amount of money the state really will have to spend.

Graves based his budget on revenue estimates made in November, and collections in the general fund through February were $49.6 million short of expectations. State officials and university economists are scheduled to release new estimates April 4.

Definitions of sporting terms help new fans

March Madness works like clockwork. Every March the Kansas Jayhawks fold easier than lawn furniture in one of the first few rounds of the tournament, the Duke Blue

Devils start firing on all 12 cylinders at exactly the right moment, and I am forced to think of innovative ways to convince my significant other to let me watch each and every game of the men's basketball tournament.

Trust me, it's tough to convince someone only loosely interested in sports the importance of viewing the first round matchup between Stanford and the Central Idaho Biddy Ball champions. I'm sure you have the same problem: dealing with sports apathy.

Can I get an amen? So, for everyone trying to teach a budding sports fan the enjoyment of watching any activity that involves a jock strap and a scorecard, here is my guide to the terms and phrases that pepper the lingua franca of sporting conversations.

Player strike - Unique coaching method attributed to Texas Tech head coach Bobby Choking under pressure — Another coaching method pioneered by coach Knight. Part of the cause for Knight's expulsion from Indiana. Field of 64 - Phrase the XFL uses to describe its fan base.

Hip check - Medical test that got Albert Belle sidelined for the rest of his career.

Minor league - League from which Mark Chmura chooses potential girlfriends. Dime defense - Aggressive method used by Darryl Strawberry to keep other players away from his stash of marijuana.

Draft pick - How New York Giants quarterback Kerry Collins selected beverages before his stint in rehab.

Hail Mary - What fans do before their team attempts a game-winning 50-yard field goal. Free agent - Nonexistent. Opposite of Scott Boras - insanely expensive agent.

Salary cap - Designer headwear not yet available for baseball teams.

Hit and run - How Jason Kidd treats his wife ed to describe Darryl Straw Astacio and others.

Traveling - Action soon to be taken by Vancouver Grizzlies on their way to Memphis, Tenn. See also: former Cleveland Browns, Kansas City Kings, Brooklyn Dodgers, and Milwaukee Braves.

Pick-up games - What fans play with XFL

Alternating-possession rule - How Kobe and Shaq should handle their on-court disagreement.

Over the limit - Credit-card phrase never uttered to Alex Rodriguez.

Scoring opportunity - Chance every male wants with Anna Kournikova.

Low percentage shot - Chance every male has with Anna Kournikova. Dead ball - Condition of ball after encounter with Ray Lewis. See also: sudden death. Unintentional grounding — What happens every time Chuck Knoblauch tries to make a throw to first base. Face-off - Description of Mike Tyson's encounter with Evander Holyfield. Example: "When Tyson fought Holyfield, he tried to chew his whole face-off."

One in a million - Description of Wilt Chamberlin's off-court activities. See also: bump and run, and man in motion. High post — According to one basketball player, the condition of more than 60 percent of post players in the NBA. Opposite of "sober post." Offensive foul - Condition of the lyrics on

Allen Iverson's recent rap album. Two-minute drill - Length of time the average fan can stomach the XFL. Same condition exists for the CBA, and the USFL. Sweet Sixteen - Number of games the Kansas City Royals expect to win this season (out of 162). Elite Eight - Number of games the Montreal Expos expect to win this season (out of 162).

When you cuddle up with your brackets to watch the conclusion of this year's madness, use this handy guide to fend off questions from uniformed bystanders.

The sporting vernacular can be tricky. But finding a way to impart the love of sports to someone more interested in "The Antique Roadshow" now is a little bit easier. As you struggle to reach out to the sporting-impaired, this guide to the sports fan lexicon will be invaluable

We can cure sports apathy. Keep this guide handy, and preach on, my friends. Preach on.

K-State's Phineas Atchison gets fouled by Oklahoma's Daryan Selvy, 24, and Aaron McGhee during K-State's 63-64 overtime loss in January. The Cats made it to the second round of the Big 12 Tournament after beating Nebraska in the first round.

2000-01 CAT TIMELINE

Nov. 18, 2000: Jim Wooldridge makes his K-State regular-season debut with a 71-55 victory over Texas-San Antonio.

Dec. 23: K-State shocks No. 19 Iowa, defeating the Hawkeyes 86-78 before 7,198 at Bramlage Coliseum. Guard Larry Reid sparked the Cat attack with a career-high 31 points.

Jan. 6, 2001: The Wildcats win their Big 12 opener on the road in College Station, Texas, downing Texas A&M 53-48.

Jan. 16: Wooldridge picks up his second victory over a top-25 opponent, joining Cotton Fitzsimmons as the only Cat coach to do so in his first season. K-State trounces No. 20 Missouri, 80-59, led by forward Matt Siebrandt's 20 points and nine rebounds

Jan. 19: Wooldridge announces that senior center Joe Leonard is out for the season after suffering a mid-foot sprain in the Missouri victory.

Jan. 20: K-State surrenders a one-point lead with 10 seconds left in overtime to fall 64-63 to No. 22 Oklahoma at Bramlage Coliseum. The loss would mark the beginning of a sevengame losing skid for the Cats.

Jan. 25: Redshirt freshman running back Rashad Washington joins the team, giving K-State a full 10-person practice squad.

Jan. 30: Wooldridge's squad can't maintain a one-point lead in the final 1:24 as the Cats lose 63-61 to the Nebraska Huskers at home, the team's third-straight defeat of the year.

Feb. 7: K-State blows a five-point lead with just over a minute to play in Columbia, as Missou avenges its earlier loss to the Cats with a 70-66 victory. It's loss No. 5 in a row for the purple

Feb. 14: Forward Matt Siebrandt calls it one of the Cats' worst outings of the season, as K-State is handed an 82-56 loss to Nebraska in Lincoln, the team's seventh straight loss.

Feb. 18: K-State snaps its losing skid with a 73-54 win over Texas Tech in Manhattan. The victory preserves the Cats 55th-straight winning season at home

Feb. 24: Two Kelvin Howell free-throws give K-State a one-point lead with under a minute to play, but Oklahoma State scores the final six points of the game to claim a 52-47 win in March 3: Wooldridge's squad ends the regular season with a 72-67 victory against Colorado in Boulder, securing K-State the 10th-seed in the Phillips 66 Big 12 Tournament.

March 8: Forward Travis Reynolds' twisting shot in the lane with 1.5 seconds remaining lifts the Cats to a 62-58 win over seventhseed Nebraska in the first round of the Big 12 tournament in Kansas City, Mo.

March 9: The Cats' run in the conference tournament is halted by intrastate rival Kansas, as the Jayhawks trample K-State, 94-63, in the quarterfinals. Wooldridge's first season ends with an 11-18 overall record, including 4-12 in league play im Wooldridge didn't overwhelm his basketball team this season with unreason able expectations, lofty objectives or any unwarranted wills. Nor did he confound them with an enormous amount of pressure to attain a certain record or even win a particular number of games in the Big 12 postseason tournament

In fact, the first-year head coach said he set one single goal for his squad.

The only goal that I had was to get better every day and let's be as good as we can be. That was the goal," Wooldridge said after the season. And he said his team made considerable

"I think they did get better," Wooldridge said. "That's the thing that we as coaches were encouraged with as the season went on - they got a little better and a little better."

K-State ended the year with an 11-18 overall record, including 10th in the Big 12 with a 4-12 mark in league play. Not only was that an improvement from last season's 9-19 linish under thenhead coach Tom Asbury, but the Wildcats also were picked last in both preseason conference polls.

"I think we developed into a better team than what people thought we could be," Wooldridge said. "I don't think there's any doubt, and in that sense, it was a really rewarding season. Wooldridge said there were several bright spots in his inaugural season in purple.

He boasted two upsets of top-25 opponents - to do so in his first year of action - as K-State pulled off an 86-78 victory over No. 19 Jowa on Dec. 23 and followed with a Jan. 16 shellacking of conference foe and 20th-ranked Missouri, 80-59.

Wooldridge also led his squad to a first-round win in the conference tournament as his team rallied to claim a late-second 62-58 win over seventh-seed Nebraska.

"I think our team accomplished a lot, and I think they played with a sense of pride this year," he said. They won four league games, which is certainly nothing to brag about, but that's twice as many as the year before. They beat two teams that were in the Top 20 or 25 at the time, and they won two road games in this league, which is a difficult task."

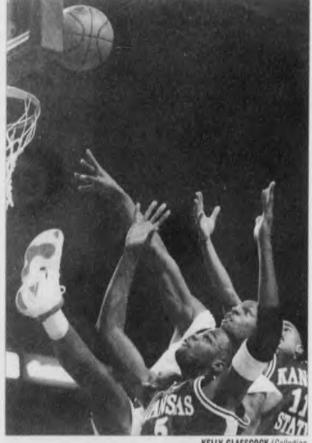

Unfortunately, the team had its share of shortcomings as well, including a monthlong, sevengaine losing streak that began in late January. In fact, after winter break, the team only won three games in all of the spring semester.

As a result, Wooldridge said he was pitted with the task of keeping his squad together.

"Anytime you lose, there's a chance you're going to lose your team," he said. "But we've got the kind of kids on this particular team that really stay together. They continue to work hard in practice, and I think they continue to believe that they can heat people in this league.

"At times, maybe we lost a little confidence, but they always seemed to rejuvenate, and they were a resilient group of kids. And I think the proof in that was how they finished the season,

Andrew Chavez

By JJ DUNCAN Kansas State Collegian

Well-thumbed copies of books by great authors and puets litter the small foft apartment of Andrew Chavez, mixed in with the dirty dishes, a half-empty bottle of "Crown Boyal" and numerous spiral notebooks filled with his own work Chavez pieks a notebook up, and drawn in marker on the front is

"I'm on 106 right now," he said. Boxes are filled with the wide-rule, five-subject notebooks, covered in the words he's been inking our with a fountain pen for years. Chayez, a K-State graduate with a master's degree in English, recounted the reason why the first 30 are missing. He said they were burned in an angry spell he had with his work.

"I was lighting with myself, and I was young enough that I didn't think is mattered." he said. "I burnt them and gave them a good burial."

Chavez's love for writing is obvious, but this love has extended beyond the point of just writing, he said. Chavez said that because of the status quo of poetry, he is on a mission to save it.

The assertion is that what Chavez feels is the dominant style, postmodernism, is stifling poetry and artists must return to the style of the romantics to regain the spirit it has fost, he said. His book, "A New Romanticism," uses essays, some of his own poems and a manifesto to promote the idea.

Andrew Chavez's book, "A New Romanticism" was released in time for April, which is National Poetry the book, which is available at several Manhattan book stores.

Month. Here are two excerpts from

"I'm not the type to pick a quarrel. It would be just as well with me to jump into the river without causing any waves, but this has to be said," Chavez said.

"Modern poetry has become a tyranny over the art of poetry," Chavez wrote in "A New Romanticism."

The argument is far from airtight. In fact, the whole book is off the wall, said Jonathan guished professor of English and poet in residence. Holden, who instructed Chavez during his graduate studies in the late 1990s, said Chavez showed promise as a poet, but judging from the book, he said he doesn't have a firm grasp on the art.

"He's what you might call a poetry crazy." Holden said. "They come along every now and then with these megalomaniac ideas that are absurdly out of proportion to poetry. He's trying to be (Ezra) Pound, but he hasn't done his homework."

The main poets Chavez said he is arguing against are Ezra Pound, T.S. Eliot and William Carlos Williams. Chavez said although they were admirable, accomplished, ingenious poets, their conclusions were wrong.

Chavez said the post-modernist movement, which these three poets helped to inspire, attempts not to rely > on revelation and inspiration, which is where he thinks poetry should come of avoiding inspiration we should use it," he said. "It's time to return poetry to the people and off just the campuses. We need to focus on people.

As an argument against modern poetry. Holden said the idea is invalid and said all of these poets have been dead for nearly 30 years. Pound was the longest living of the three and died in 1972, Holden said the argument is presented in the same way other poets have written manifestos detailing their ideas, but it lacks the genius that made the other essays

The work Holden said he saw from Chavez in his classes would sometimes could be worthy poetry. However, the book is a classic example of a little knowledge being a dangerous thing, Holden said.

"He doesn't understand enough of what he's doing," he said, "It's absurd that he should preach to the world."

"A New Romanticism" is published by 1st Books Library, a company that charges the author for publishing costs. The book is available at The Dusty Bookshelf The K-State Union Bookstore, Varney's Book Store and Hastings, Chavez said.

Whether his ideas are accepted, Chavez said he will keep writing and pursuing his love of words. Out of the heaps of poems he produces. Chavez said only a handful of them truly please him.

"I go through thousands of poems, and most of them I trash," he said. "I just pull the best out If I write 100 poems. Fil be happy if one or two are really good,"

Though his idea is to move poetry away from university professors and more to off-campus writers, he said he recognizes the importance of university education. Chavez said he will continue to spread his ideas about poetry and hopefully find likeminded people producing material.

"I want to cultivate this while I'm alive," he said. "I want to find others who can work with me on this because I can't do this on my own.'

"My Sickness"

My sickness soaked into everything Everything I said or did, And all things having anything to do

It spread all over my body, Soaked into every thought; every It filled my body full

And then spilled and splattered on the floor Where I'd slip, stumble, and fall, often face first, Into the stink and stench of my own overflowing sickness

That was as nauseating as unnec-There was no word I could speak. No action, no behavior that wasn't influenced

By my sickness dull and deadening, It seemed my sickness Was going to fester forever in this world of mine That longed for a little healing.

with a win on the road and a win in the league tournament."

In turn, Wooldridge said his troops built a name for themselves among the K-State basketball community.

"I think we established with our team that we are going to play hard and play with a sense of urgency that we've got a real commitment to get this thing turned around."

Associate head coach Mike Miller said he believes Wooldridge did a commendable job of instilling that goal in his players throughout the season - from start to finish.

"With so many questions, it's very difficult to do that," Miller said. ") think the one thing that Jim did a very good job of in coaching this team was keeping them on that task - 'Let's get better today' - and then giving them ways and an avenue to measure that: And they could see that."

As far as next season is concerned, Wooldridge already has five recruits with verbal commitments. The list includes three shooting guards - Nick Williams. Janerio Spuriock and Gilson DeJesus - all above 6 feet 3 inches; small forward Marcello DeBarrosa; and 6-foot-10 center Travis Canby, of Fork Union, Va.

Wooldridge said the new faces are expected to have immediate impacts on K-Stare's baskerball program.

And in smoothing that transition. Athletic Director Max Urick said. Wooldridge is unquestionably the right man for the job.

There's fire in the belly again. for Kansas State basketball, and people better get ready for this because it's going to happen. He's intense. He's ready. He's committed," Urick said.

"I couldn't have asked a new head coach to do any more than what he has done here. He has exceeded my expectations. He has a great future."

year, we had to look at donations as an option.

Those donations, Urick said, will be used to fund all student athlete support services, with scholarship as the top priority. Including summer school, the K-State Department of Athletics pays more than $3.5 million in scholarships to the university for athlete financial aid.

That dollar amount continues to increase, as in-state and out-of-state scholarships have risen an estimated 19 percent and 15 percent, respectively, over the past six years.

The athletic program always is in need of creating new methods of revenue, Urick said, as K-State's athletic budget of $23 million almost is entirely generated revenue. Of that total, only $1 million is allocated ($400,000 coming from student fees and $600,000 from the university on a salary supplement and other operating expenses).

The donation plan alone is expected to raise an additional $1.5 million in 2002, while the elimination of the family plan beginning this season will save $400,000.

While required donations will generate additional revenue to offset yearly increases in expenses, Urick said reductions also have been made, as the administrative staff has been asked to reduce its operating budget by 2 percent.

Urick said the new donarion system would not only generate additional revenue to offset yearly increases in athletic expenses, but it also will create seating equity throughout the stadium and bring about new opportunities for seating relocation based on availability.

Season-ticket holders who choose not to make a scholarship donation won't be denied tickets, though Urick said. Conversely, they'll be relocated to another part of the stadium that doesn't require a donation, primarily

Those vacated seats then will be distributed to fans based on a priority points system, in which one point is given for each season football ticket purchased over the past five years as well as one point for each $500 donated during that time period.

Not that a donation system is a rare commodity in the Big 12 by any means, or most major universities across the nation. In fact, Duggan said K-State is one of, if not the last, athletic program in the conference to administer such a plan.

"In regards to football, most of them already do it and have some type of required donations," she said. "So we definitely looked at the Big 12 as well as nationwide for what people are doing. We're just keeping up with the trend."

Urick said plans for the donation system began in 1998. He and Michael O'Brien, associate athletic director for development, headed the roughly 15-person committee. which included members of the ticket office, development office and top administration. The policies also were submitted to the Ahearn Scholarship Board and the Athletic Council for prior approval

As for the future, Urick said the athletic department most likely will look to men's basketball to generate additional funds, as football ($8 million) and men's basketball ($1.5 million) provide the two main sources of ticket revenue at K-State.

"A couple of years ago we couldn't raise ticket prices in basketball, and we don't plan to this year, Unck said, "but that'll be the next area that we go to, because we're real low in basketball ticket prices in terms of in the marketplace.

Yet that step is still years down the road.

"We think that'll pick up, and we projected increases there, but I don't want to get too aggressive on those projections because you can come up with shortfalls if you do that."

CREDIT CARDS

have been pertinent information, but more importantly he wants to address the fact that cards are solicited directly on campus.

However, Renz said they would find other ways besides campus solicitation to market cards to students, including direct-mail offers and informational brochures.

"This bill wouldn't impact the terms of the contract, but we would have to find alternate ways to market to students that would be effective," Renz said.

STUDENTS AT RISK?

There are 18,000 Intrust cardholders. Approximately 3,000 of those accounts belong to students.

Nichols said the solicitation revenue the Alumni Association gains might be used for support, which is important to the institution, but it might be putting students at risk of accumulating large debts.

"Soliciting these credit cards to students may allow the university extra revenue, but at what cost is that money coming? Are students going into debt because of this? I have some concerns that they are," Nichols said.

Nichols' intent isn't to limit student's access to credit cards. "As adults, students have plenty of knowledge and know-how to find credit cards themselves. There's no need for the university to help facilitate students' access to them," Nichols said. "If they can do it on their own, then we should let them."

The bill also will address the selling of names of students and employees to credit card companies. The bill would make this illegal, and violating schools would be fined.

University Registrar Don Foster said his office gets many calls from companies requesting this information, but it is never released.

"We absolutely do not provide this information," Foster said. "These companies know students make good potential customers, but our obligation is to the students, not outside companies.

Nichols said he was not able to get a straight answer from universities whether this was done.

However, he said he does have concerns. Many student have told him they never received credit card applications until enrolling at a university. Now he said, they get several, all targeted at students of their specific university.

Nichols himself recently enrolled in a masters program at KU and said he has gotten applications targeted to KU students. He said it seems like too much of a coincidence to ignore.

"I don't have any answers on whether these lists are provided to credit card companies or not." Nichols said, "but it looks like it is a possibility." Nichols said though he thinks the bill is important, he decided not to push it through because he wanted it to be addressed more positively.

A working group will be organized this summer to talk about the issue and explore what options are available. He said the group will include interested stockholders including universities, alumni associations and students.

Nichols said it is important to remember that the students were the main concern in introducing the bill and will remain the focus.

"This is a public policy that needs to be addressed, because it has gotten out of hand," Nichols said. "We're talking about the futures of these students and our obligation to see that they're not be coerced into anything.

the blue as far as I'm concerned," Deustch said. "But now I'm faced with the fact that the price of our tickets have doubled.

donations for season tickets have also stirred a variety of discussion. not all negative, though, Adolph Thave donors that sit clear in the end zone, where there is no required donation, so now they're thinking, 'Well finally, I'm going to get to be moved to better seats. I've had several calls on that," she said.

One such donor is Bill Lewis. Scott City, Kan., native and threeyear season-ticket holder, who hopes the new system will allow him to relocate to a more premium location in KSU Stadium

"I think it will hopefully benefit me since I'm already a donor," Lewis said. "We're sitting in the end. zone right now, and it kind of ticks me off that I know people over in the west side bench seats that aren't giving anything, so it's a pretty good system from what I've seen.

Either way, arguments from both sides were expected to surface upon announcing the policy changes, Kathy Duggan, K-State development officer, said, but several K-State fans won't be affected by the policy change at all.

The new plan will fail to affect the chairback seats on the west side of the stadium, which were sold on a lifetime contract basis upon the stadium's original construction, and will not mandate a donation.

East side chairbacks also have carried donation requirements as well, as have the suite levels on both sides of the stadium.

Despite the weighing debate. Adolph said the policy changes were essential for the university.

'It's just coming down to economics and having to support all of the athletic teams," she said.

Chris Collins checks his mail every day. At least once a week, he pulls out a credit card

He accepts the ones that offer the best incentives and throws the others away.

He's a part of the game that credit-card companies play to get new accounts. Everything from unbelievably low annual percentage rates, travel savings certificates and free stuff seem to be fair ammunition.

But accounting instructor Fred Smith said he urges students to watch out. Collins, junior in finance, said he'll keep a card for the introductory rate and then transfer the balance to a new card when the rate increases. Collins also looks at what kind of travel promotions companies offer.

Many credit card companies now offer discount air travel certificates. Depending on the offer, they can be worth $25-$100. Some applications explain that such certificates are only sent to card holders if they have a balance on their card.

"I realize it's more of a ploy than a benefit," Collins said. "But if you know how to use these incentives, they can help you."

Collins said card companies use incentives to draw new business. Students just have to make sure they understand how they work, he said

"I'm okay getting a 2-percent APR for six months," Collins said. "Students may not always know that they are going to go back up, though."

The APR is the amount of interest account holders pay on purchases made on their credit cards. These rates are different for all credit card issuers.

Most credit-card applications provide information on APR and how it is calculated, balance transfers, credit limit and late fees. Smith said it's important to understand what all of the terms mean. He said when students see APR rates under 10 percent, they should make sure to read everything carefully because it might not stay that low for long.

"Companies use introductory rates frequently," Smith said. "Usually those are only applicable for a few months then it can jump to over 20 percent. You have to research everything."

Smith said that reading the fine print on all applications is more important than most students realize. The large print, he said.

usually is just a teaser. It doesn't provide the details students need to make an informed decision.

"Sometimes, the bold print on the top of the application doesn't tell the whole story," Smith said. "It's the tiny print on the back that's really important."

Monte McClure, senior in education, didn't think his card applications would be accepted. But the free gifts promised to him were worth the time it took for him to sign his

At a World Wrestling Federation event, McClure filled out an application for a credit card. It offered approved applicants a card with their favorite wrestler on it.

"I didn't think I'd get accepted, but I got my card in the mail with the Macho Man on it." McClure said. "I've stopped to fill out a couple applications for the free stuff, but I'm always surprised that I get them.

Not only does it surprise him that he gets accepted, but also that he is given such a high credit limit. McClure said credit cards targeted to students are kind of deceptive.

They know that they don't have that much money, but they give you that limit so

Man robbed at gunpoint on campus

By BRYAN SCRIBNER Kansas State Collegian

An armed robbery on campus Saturday night was a rare occurrence, according to K-State Police.

Chris Christensen, assistant director of admissions and financial aid, was robbed at gunpoint outside of Fairchild Hall at 8:55 p.m. Christensen said he was getting out of his vehicle when three black males approached him. One man held a gun, and he was asked three times for his

The suspects fled the scene when Christensen complied with their request. He said he immediately reported the robbery to the campus police.

K-State Police Capt. Robert Mellgren said no arrests have been made in connection with the robbery. He said an investigation still is being conducted.

Mellgren said the crime was one of only two or three that he could recall within the past 10 years.

"I think this was more or less an unusual occurrence on campus," he said. "We hope it doesn't happen again." Robberies, Mellgren said, should be reported as soon as possible. He said victims should cooperate and try to avoid harm to the best of their abilities. "We don't want anyone to be a hero," he said. "They need to be aware of their surroundings and try to stay in a protected area.'

Christensen said the traumatic event has encouraged him to be safe on campus. He said students should take proper precautions.

"Be in places that are well lit, and try to be with someone else," he said.

RCPD facing problems with new building

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

Insufficient exterior lighting, interview rooms with inadequate soundproofing, limited parking and lack of storage space all are issues officials said they have had to address with the Riley County Police Department's new Law Enforcement Center.

Russ Frey, county commissioner, said problems stemmed from the center, which has been operational since November, due to restrictions that were placed on it from the beginning.

He said voters only approved $10.8 million for the facility that equated to 58,000 square feet. After a local systems assessment, jail-design experts figured they needed about $13 million for the RCPD to efficiently operate in a new building.

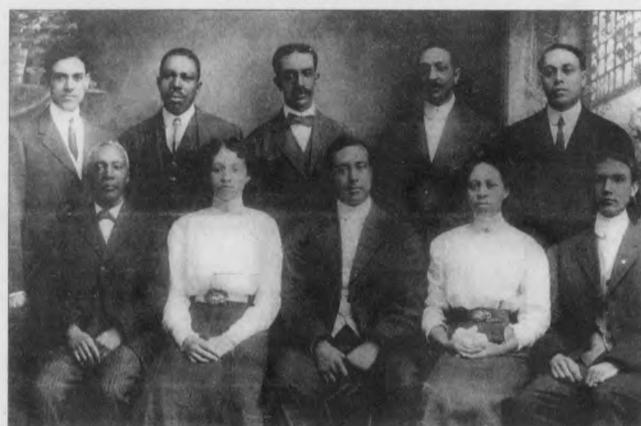

"We should've approached it in terms of how much square feet was needed," he said. "We needed 75,000 square feet, but since that was going to take $12.3 million, we had to come back down."

Frey said he isn't surprised by some of the problems the Law Enforcement Center has faced.

COMMENCEMENT DAY PROGRAM

Pat Patton, university archives research specialist. has pieced together an entire life story from a single sheet of paper she found in the university archives. It's a story she's researched for more than four years.

"Let me tell you a story about a young woman who was born on the fourth of July in 1878. It's a story of where her journey took her and the people she met along the way." Patton said.

From this one paper, Patton has been able to tell the story of Minnie M. Howell Champe, the first black female graduate of Kansas State Agricultural College, now K-

> Minnie Howell Champe graduated with a bachelor of science degree in domestic science in 1901. Patton says it's a great accomplishment for a woman of her time. However, the strength and determination that led Champe to graduation is a story in itself. She was the oldest of nine children and the only one in her

Immediate family to graduate from college Patton said the story is one of dedication and endurance. Champe was pursuing something that many women of her time didn't dream of.

"We admire young women today who graduate from college and go on to succeed in their careers." Patton said. "For Minnie to accomplish all of this in 1901 is amazing."

Champe was elected to the Ionain Literary Society while attending school. The literary society's purpose was to train and develop members' skills in literary and forensics. Members were required to give orations, write papers and make speeches.

In 1897, Champe was named editor of the Ionian Oracle, the magazine put together by her literary

"She was a bright young woman," Patton said. "Her education was a very important part of her life." Champe was mentioned in the school paper as a well-rendered plano soloist on a few occasions. After her graduation in 1901, she went on to teach in Topeka, Kansas City, Kan., and Petersburg, Va. Patton said it was obvious that education was important to Champe. She also saw to it that her only daughter, Francis, received an education as well. Francis obtained her teaching certificate while Champe served as head of the home economics department at Southern University, Scotlandville, LA. Champe's husband had died by this time. Patton said raising a child alone was another admirable feat. Having a career and raising a child alone isn't easy today, Patton said. During Champe's time, it was even harder.

"I've always asked people, in my research, if Minnie was ever upset or stressed about her situation." Patton said. "They say it just wasn't her way. It was just something she had to do."

Don Slater, a lifelong Manhattan resident, lived across the street from Champe. He said he and others who lived in the neighborhood remember Champe as the "cookie lady." Slater was about eight at the time.

"She would always be sitting on the porch and give us cookies," Slater said. "Even if I'd just eaten, I could eat a cookie.'

Slater said Champe always was friendly and always willing to sit with the neighborhood children.

Patton said Champe also was proud of her ties to K-State. She paid her membership dues to the Alumni Association in 1922 and paid for "Life Paid" membership between 1931 and 1932.

Since Champe was so proud of her ties to K-State, Slater said, it is important for her story to be recog-

"It's part of K-State history," Slater said. "And it's black history that many black students at K-State should know. They don't realize what blacks during Minnie's time went through."

Champe died in Manhattan on July 22, 1948. Champe's death was the only record of her life that the University Archives had when Patton began her research.

Patton said the years of research were worth it because Champe's story is one that needed to be told.

"People who knew Minnie always say she was a good role model and way ahead of her time," Patton said. "She knew that family and education were the most important things in life. Her life should be an example to all of us."

Wildcat staff, players to offer basketball camps

K-State's season might be over, but Bramlage Coliseum will be filled with hoops again this summer for the lim Wooldridge Basketball Camp 2001.

The Wildcat staff and players are set to hold two individual camps, a June 17-20 session and another from July 29-Aug. 1, as well as a Father/Son Camp on June 15

The two individual camps, for children and young adults ages 8-18, offer a variety of superlatives. Outstanding high school and college coaches from around the world will be on hand to instruct and demonstrate, with daily plus trophies given away at the final camp assembly and Award Ceremony.

"We had successful camps last year, and we think they'll be even bigger and better this year. Wooldridge said. These individual camps are for fundamental improvement, and it's a great way to get to know young kids all over

Campers will participate in 5on-5 and 3-on-3 games daily, grouped by similar age and ability levels, with equal playing time assured for all involved.

Each participant will receive a camp I-shirt, basketball and camp certificate complete with evaluation, while also getting the chance to listen to guest speakers from the NBA and collegiate levels.

Meanwhile, the Father/Son Camp, reserved for children in grades K-8th, features daily contests and awards, with 2-on-2 games and 4-on-4 half court games. Emphasis will be placed on fundamentals to the fathers, who will in turn teach their son.

Both father and son receive camp t-shirts, as well as one camp basketball to share. Space is limited to the first 120 father and son pairs who sign up.

"Our father/son camp is a wonderful way of using our program to involve families, albeit just father and son," Wooldridge said. "But it's about that. It's about family and spending time with your kids, and we like the idea of being a part of that."

Overnight campers will be housed in a campus residence hall, with food services provided by the Derby Dining Center. Total cost is $295, although a commuter or day camper rate is also available for $195. A $100 deposit must be submitted with the enrollment application. The father/son camp fee is $145, with full payment due with the application. No refunds will be offered.

Wooldridge said his players are looking forward to the summer

"I think college kids really enjoy working with the young ones," he said. "I think they get more excited about working with them than anyone, because kids look up to them so much. It's a time to kind of flex your muscles with them."

Developers' deadline for Oz theme park extended

TOPEKA — Forget going over the rainbow. Legislators just wanted to get over Oz - the proposed theme park, that is.

The House spent nearly two hours Monday afternoon debating a bill to extend the deadline for developers to break ground on the proposed $861 million Johnson County attraction. A voice vote sent the bill to final action Tuesday.

The bill extends the life of a state bonding package that would allow the project to be developed and the bonds to be repaid through taxes collected at the theme park and resort.

"Who's tired of hearing about Oz?" asked Rep. Gerry Ray, R-Overland Park. She said she would be thrilled never to discuss the project and leave it to county officials to sort out.

As amended, the bill would extend the deadline by one year, to July 1, 2002, as requested by Johnson County commissioners. The extension would give the county time to conduct its own feasibility study on the park. planned for the grounds of the former Sunflower Army Ammunition Plant near DeSoto.

The Johnson County Commission voted 2-2 this month to table Oz project. It then voted 3-1 to ask legislators for an extension to conduct its own feasibility study.

Much of Monday's debate focused on the promises made by developers of the proposed Wonderful World of Oz theme park, which critics called "myth." Among those promises are increased jobs, tourism and development in western Johnson County.

Rep. John Ballou, R-Gardner, said the process was nothing short of a "land grab" with Oz developers trying to obtain what could be the hottest property in the Kansas Highway 10 corridor between Johnson and Douglas counties.

The potential financial gain, even if the park fails, is enormous, Ballou said. He speculated that the property could fetch developers hundreds of millions of dollars after the land is cleaned up by the federal government.

City commission to face difficult budget decisions for 2002

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

A Tuesday presentation to the Manhattan City Commission suggested the city might need to tighten its belt to fund losses in

On the eye of the May-to-June period when the city plans to draw up the 2002 budget, Director of Finance Bernie Hayen said the city's financial condition is sound overall, but four particular warning signs in the 2001 budget might point to difficult decisions ahead.

"I see some red flags on the horizon," Hayen said.

One such flag is that the city's general fund cash balance has decreased from $1,772,480 in 2000 to $957,240 in 2001 and is expected to drop as low as $750,000 for the next year. This amount would drop the funds below the 7 percent the city has maintained in past years.

A second flag Hayen said he saw is that most of the city's property-tax revenues are spent outside of city hall. Despite complaints that rising property taxes help feather city nests, Hayen said the city only got 35 percent of 2001's $9,328,790 in property-tax revenue. Of the other $6,985,106 going to outside city expenses, 51 percent, or $4,772,582, has been budgeted to the Riley County Police Department. Hayen said he doesn't have a complaint against the service of the RCPD, but as a city/county consolidated police force, no community in Kansas is paying more per capita for police service than Manhattan.

Commissioner Ed Klimek said he wants to know more about how the funding system for the RCPD has evolved since the combination of city and state funding.

"I think the funding mechanism is something the commission, as a policy issue, is going to have to look at," he said.

Of the 9 percent that is spent internally on city services, Hayen said the largest expenditure is city debt - that is bonds and interest, a total of $1,066,707.

"It's certainly not high for firstclass cities, but it's high enough that I'm not comfortable with it," he said.

A third red flag is that one-third of city sales taxes also were transferred to agencies outside of city government. Most of this reallocation was ordered by past commissions, he said.

I feel almost apologetic for that," Hayen said. "It puts the manager in a very awkward position. He has a very small say in deteriorated areas. Property where those revenues go."

The fourth flag Hayen presented was that state sources of revenue, such as the Special Street & Highway fund and state revenue sharing, will decline.

"I think they'll find all sorts of ways to squirrel away the funds they'd normally give us," he said.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he also would like to see how much of city services are feesupplied.

In other business, commissioners reviewed a proposal for a program that would create a taxrebate program in the downtown and Aggieville business districts.

The Neighborhood Revitalization Act, presented by Redevelopment Coordinator Jason Hilgers, was passed by the Kansas Legislature in 1994 to assist the renovation of dilapidated and owners who improve their land in a designated area might pay higher taxes, Hilgers said, but the program allows the extra money to be refunded.

The proposed area is bounded by Ratone Lane, McCall Road on the east, Pottawatomie Avenue on the south and Evergreen Avenue on the west.

Locally, Hilgers recommended that property owners invest a minimum of $5,000 and raise the property's assessed valuation by at least 5 percent. Then they would receive 95 percent of the extra tax money back each of the first live years and 50 percent back each from the sixth to 10th years.

"I think it gives the city and county a reason to go through with this program," Hilgers said.

Concerns raised by commissioners included that the city. county and school district must support it to provide significant tax rebates.

"There's no use passing this and not having them be in agreement," Mayor Karen McCulloh said. "If they're adamantly opposed, I don't think we should go very far.

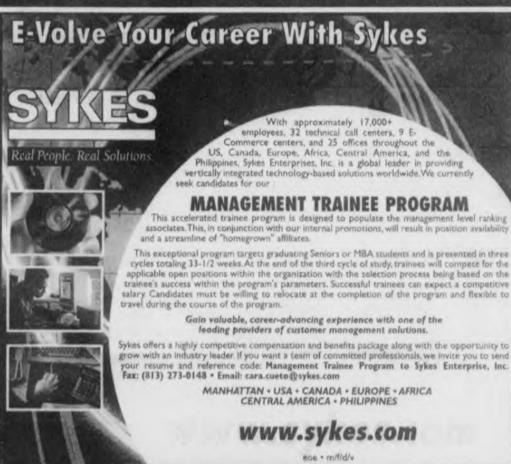

Commissioner Roger Reitz also said he was concerned that the commission alone would determine what needed improvement if owners applied for rebates outside the boundaries.

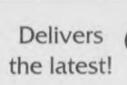

"Dilapidation, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder," Reitz said.

The meeting ended, however, with commissioners directing city staff to see what the other taxing entities thought, as well as how helpful a city-only program would

"This is another one of those tools we need to put in place," Commissioner Carol Peak said.

for athletes.

Since it is just for athletes, it seems to make sense at first glance because the money is obtained from ticket sales.

from ticket sales.
However, with the possibility of extensive budget cuts across K-State, it does not seem fair that the funding assists athletes only.

Also, the family plan no longer is in existence. This is a problem because tickets for children now are the same price as adult tickets.

Several sources have said K-State is just following a trend that other universities have already established, but who can overlook the fact that donations should not be mandatory?

Of course, supply and demand must be considered. As long as people are willing to pay extra, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has decided to seize the opportunity to obtain more funding. Students will be financially affected by the requirement when they become alumni.

School shootings product of families, self-centered society

A new fad seems to be sweeping the schools of our nation. It's not a fashion trend or even a new techno gadget that adolescent school children just have to have.

The newest fad in our education system is violence.

The "in thing" to do now for elementary through high school students is to shoot up their schools and their classmates. Before the Columbine shootings, these events were rare. Within the last month, however, there has been a rash of shootings. Schools across the last month, however, there has been a rash of shootings. Schools across the nation are being terrorized by gun-toting teen-agers, and in some cases, even grade-schoolers.

I think these shootings are a byproduct of our self-centered society. I do think the parents partially are to blame for their children's actions, but I think the very nature of our society has had an person these children too.

impact on these children, too.

Such a desperate act obviously is a cry for attention or help. These children feel so neglected by their families, their peers or their environment, that they choose to get any sort of attention they can receive.

Perhaps their parents don't take the time to ask their children how their day went or what's going on in their lives. Children need to know their parents care about them. I think it would be harder for one of these troubled students to commit such heirous crimes if they knew.

their parents really cared about them and what they were going through.

I think our society makes it easy for those children to shoot up their schools. The generation going through school right now was weaned on television. They have more access to information than any generation before them has. The information accessible to them isn't always appropriate for their age group, though.

The messages our society sends through the media often are violent and self-centered. The evening news, which most parents watch, is full of violent acts. Advertising messages and television programs tell us we have to look out for No. 1. We learn at an early age that the most important person in the world is yourself.

When you're bombarded by all of these messages, it's easier for a troubled mind to rationalize their behavior. They think they are acting like the norm because that's what they've seen on television or heard in the news. Our children have been taught that it's OK to put their wants and needs before those of others.

Our society also promotes the "quick fix." It's much easier to take a gun to school and shoot the person you're having problems with than it is to talk to them and work through your difficulties.

The solution to school violence is not metal detectors or security guards. The real solution can be found in the way we raise our children. We need to teach future generations that violence is not a solution. Violence of this caliber is a permanent solution to a temporary problem.

We need to educate our children about the consequences of their actions, Self-centered actions, such as bringing a gun to school, end up harming many other people than just the intended target. The acts of violence occurring in our schools are leaving physical and emotional scars on thousands of students.

Parents also need to pay more attention to their, children's lives. Not every potential problem can be stopped at this level, but some can. Parents need to take an active stake in their children's lives. They need to get involved in their children's school work and activities, get to know their children's friends and their friends' parents, and talk to their children's teachers, just to name a few things.

If we give these children the attention, love and support they deserve, they won't have to resort to these negative acts just to be noticed.

Prague culture focuses on beer, not prostitution

Editor's note; "Around the World" is a seven-part series examining European countries and capitals

Part 2: Prague, Czech Republic Part 3: Athens, Greece

PRAGUE, Czech Republic — I was fully prepared for prevalent prostitution. It's what many Americans associate with Prague.

With more than 60 sex clubs in the capital alone and an estimated 8,000 street-walkers nationwide, it shouldn't have taken a fortnight. But it required

14 days of walking the city at night before I was approached by a call girl.

Then I realized Prague shouldn't be associated with prostitution.

Americans wishing for something with which to associate Prague should to another "P" word and the Czech Near tion.

"Pivo" is the Czech word for beer.

Drinking the many fine brews of the country is as much the national pastime as watching ice hockey.

Republic's policies regarding consump-

In restaurants, the default beverage is neither water nor soda. It's a 0.5 liter draw of blended blonde brew. If you have a blank look when the waiter asks for your drink order, most likely he'll bring you the house tap beer.

Why? Not only are the beers tasty, but they are cheaper than water or Coca-Cola. It is not a myth. It is true in every establishment I visited.

It is, in fact, the direct opposite of Manhattan, K-State students forced to pinch pennies think, "Drink water when eating out. Drink beer at home when you can buy a cheap case of Natty."

Talk about culture shock.

There really was no way around it. I had to rearrange my thinking. "Drink water and rehydrate myself cheaply at home.

myself cheaply at home. Drink excellent beer all the rest of the time."

Prague's culture truly is a beer culture.
Nearly every restaurant is a pub. If not, the restaurant is completely decorated with the likeness of one brewery, be it Staropramen, Budvar, or Gambrinus.
Many foreigners find their Czech vocabulary limited to the simple please, thank you and hello, along with one other phrase. "Jedna pivo," or, "one beer."

Beer is available anywhere at anytime. Take, for example, my college dormitory, the Masarykova Kolej. Beer is available in the vending machines in 0.33 liter

It also is a choice at meals served in the cafeteria. I pinched myself at my first meal to make sure I wasn't in a twisted dream about Derby Dining Center.

I still haven't drank a beer with breakfast, but just having the option available at 7 a.m. as I head for class is strangely reassuring.

Beer also is available in the pub and club located in the residence hall basement every night of the week.

Cost again is not an issue, as 0.5 liter draws are only 15Kc. At the current currency conversion, that's $0.35 per 16

The alcohol content in the beer usually is at least twice that of beer in the United States.

How is this situation of readily available large quantities of potent cheap beer be controlled?

The Czechs have found the most responsible way is not to try to restrict its use with age discrimination, but encourage safe consumption.

A pub and club in the basement of a college dorm is an excellent example. If students choose to drink, they can do so in the safety in their own residence hall. They don't have to worry about drunk driving.

If they choose not to drink, there is pool, foosball, dancing, and even nonalcoholic drinks readily available. So what problems does the Czech Republic face?

Certainly very few relating to alcohol. Young people growing up in the beer culture are more responsible.

Open container laws are non-existent, yet there are very few drunks in the streets. Even with people drinking beer all day, there are no fat people.

Alcohol is available to anyone at anytime, but drunk driving is far less common than in the United States. Simply put, the people here consume a large amount of beer very responsibly.

Recent news here was Kansas' keg registration laws actually passed one chamber.

It was a good laugh for the locals here, that America — so great in so many / aspects — was bumbling with alcohol policy.

Kansas shouldn't be associated with close-minded, head-in-the-sand thinking, but it is. I was hoping everyone would think of clicking their heels together three times and saying, "There's no place like home." Cheers to Dorothy!

Senate reviews keg issue

The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A proposal to require liquor stores to track who buys beer kegs resurfaced and sank Tuesday in the Senate.

The Senate passed the proposal two weeks ago, but a House committee tabled it last week most likely preventing it from passing this year.

Sen. Jim Barnett, its main sponsor, tried unsuccessfully to revive the issue.

Barnett, R-Emporia, offered the beer keg proposal as an amendment to a House bill to make it illegal to administer the ingredients of the drug gamma hydroxybutyric acid without a prescription. The drug is known as the "date rape" drug, and its use without a prescription is illegal, but not the use of its separate ingredients.

Senate Democrats questioned whether Barnett's amendment was relevant to the bill. Barnett, a physician, insisted that it was.

The Kansas Constitution says any bill must have only one

"The oldest date-rape drug around is alcohol," Barnett said.

His amendment would have required retailers to record a keg purchaser's name and address before giving them a tagged keg. making it easier for police to track a keg back to its buyer - and to apprehend adults who provide alcohol to minors.

Presiding Sen. Lynn Jenkins, R-Topeka, ruled the amendment was Truck driver finds friends, peace on open road

Kansas State Collegian

The open road still calls to Pam Stortz. The view from her truck, panned out high above all other vehicles, never lost its allure. The people she met on the road remain her friends.

She's still a trucker. The only thing that's changed is the amount of time Stortz spends at the wheel.

For seven straight years, Stortz. drove her truck, Wyle E., almost every mostly because she wants to spend time with her son, she drives parttime. She said she'll always want trucking to be part of her life.

"When I'm not driving, I definitely miss it," Stortz said. "It's a peaceful experience for me.

Stortz began truck driving when her parents, Robert and Alma Buchanan, needed a responsible trucker for their business, Robert C. Buchanan Inc. The business purchases and hauls different grains from distributors to farmers. Double trailers are used to transport more than 40 tons of grain in a single trip. The Buchanans said the amount of business they do depends on the farmers' needs. In 1993, they were going through a busy time, so they asked their daughter to help out-

We were really short-handed at the time," Alma Buchanan said: "We thought Pam would be a great driver and were glad when she wanted to do

Growing up around the business caused Stortz to feel comfortable with truck driving. She said she was interested in driving from a young age.

I was immersed in it," Stortz said.

"It was what my family did, and I was glad to be a part of it."

Tests similar to those in driver's education classes were given for Stortz to earn her commercial driver's license. Soon after she got her license, she was on the road.

With only a handful of female truckers working in the area. Stortz. said she was surprised when she didn't meet much prejudice.

"The guys treated me equally," she said. 'At first, they sort of looked at me funny, but when they realized I could handle my truck, I was in."

Most of the time: Stortz said she has been able to handle her truck. Accidents do happen, however, and she'll never forget the time she earned her CB Radio name, "Double Trouble

"I was hauling a double trailer full of grain and swiped the side of my bin against the front of another truck," Stortz said. The sides are made of aluminum, and the other truck just cut into it like a can. The weight of the grain split the entire side open, and literally tons of grain came pouring out. I was embarrassed.

Her family teased her for a bit, but Stortz said she learned from her mistake and has since had a nearly perfect working record. Customers appreciate her for that and like her personality. Buchanan said.

Pam Stortz is a truck driver for her parents' business, Robert C. Buchanan, Inc. She has been working there since 1993, and she has recently been spending more time in the office than driving.

"They ask for her by name," she said. "She'll talk with the farmers, but she knows when it's time to go."

A typical working day for Stortz involves getting up around 4 a.m. to begin preparations for driving. She checks her truck's tires, the fluids and the air pressure.

The brakes, windshield wipers and a lot of other things are controlled by compressed air." Stortz said. "You don't want an air leak."

When the truck has warmed up, Stortz is ready to go. Her typical place to load up is in southern Nebraska. and her typical final destination is Emporia. She said she enjoys the trip.

"I have lots of time to think without distractions," she said. "Or just listen to music.

Driving is only half the experience, Stortz said

"We spend a lot of time waiting at the bins," she said. "That's where you start talking with people and making

The people she's met are the primary reason she keeps coming back to trucking, she said.

"If I haven't driven for a while," Stortz said, "I'll start missing those people. I'll eventually hit the road again.

Cats start spring practice

Football squad works to develop team leadership

Kansas State Collegian

Bill Snyder finds himself in a familiar position today when spring practice begins at KSU Stadium.

Although the 26 seniors lost from last year's Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl champion team marks one of, if not the largest, turnover rate since he's been at K-State, Snyder said he isn't too worried about finding players to fill the void.

"I think it's a ritual, and it's not something that anybody gets overzealous with." he said. "It just comes and goes, and we get on with business."

Besides, spring workouts always give his squad the chance to get a head start in the developmental process, Snyder said.

"I think it's very important for this team, but I think that's probably been true every spring I can remember. If it wasn't significant, we probably wouldn't have it," he said. "It does make a big differ-

"But the most important thing is just getting better. That's at the head of our goals, whether it's by position, offense or defense, or collectively as a football team. We've just got to get better all across the board, and spring practice gives us 15 opportunities to do that.

Part of that improvement deals with leadership, Snyder said, as a considerable amount of experience goes with the departure of last year's seniors.

"We spend an awful lot of time addressing leadership, and I think all of them recognize how significant and how important it is," Snyder said. "A lot of them make the attempt to try to provide some type of positive leadership in our program - we just have to identify the right

Right now, those are the six individuals selected as player representatives for the 2001 season: wide receiver Aaron Lockett, tailback Josh Scobey. fullback Rock Cartwright, free safety Jon McGraw and linebackers Ben Leber and Terry Pierce.

Those designated leaders, along with the coaching staff, will begin redeveloping the squad - with all the new faces - in preparation for next year, Snyder said.

"We've got to find the right chemistry for this football team. That's probably an overused word in college athletics today, but it's true, and it's accurate because there is always turnover," he said. "And once there's turnover, you're dealing with a different set of individuals, even though there's an ample amount of carryover. So that's going to be significant for us this

"I think there is a sense that this football team is coming together, maybe a little earlier than some in the past, perhaps.

Scobey said he agreed, as he said he feels the team made a substantial amount of progress thus far

"That's one thing that I mentioned to Coach early before winter conditioning even really got started. I was coming out of the weight room feeling a lot different than I did when I first came here - you know, a little more sore," Scobey said. "This winter was really, really crucial, and we really emphasized getting stronger, faster and bigger - and I think that's what we did.

"Overall, I think we've had the best winter K-State's had in forever. There was a large amount of weight records broke, and that's just factual right there, saying that a lot of guys went in there and busted their butt and did what they had to do."

But defensive coordinator Phil Bennett said he expects as much from this football team as he remains quite optimistic for the upcoming season. in spite of losing several key players - including six starters on both offense and defense, as well as placekicker Jamie Rheem.

"It doesn't mean we will start there right now and be where we were -there's going to be a lot of work

Roberson, others hopeful to start at quarterback

Kansas State Collegian

One year ago, Ell Roberson was the K-State football

The redshirt freshman quarterback, a USA Today honorable mention All-USA pick in high school, was entering his second year in the Cat program and expected to take the starting job from senior Jonathan Beasley. Then, in the spring game, Roberson took the snap on the white team's opening play and ran 73 yards for a touchdown. It was the worst thing that could have happened, as it gave the young quarterback a false impression of the work needed to starting quarterback, head coach Bill Snyder sa "To go back in retrospect, I cringed when it happened, and it wasn't good for him," Snyder said. "We tried to allow Ell to understand that we put 11 guys out there on defense, put them in a get-knocked-down position and didn't give them a chance to play our style of defense. "Some things come too easy, and that was one of those things that just came too easy. It was just that attitude that, time, he just learned that there's more that you have to do." When Beasley finally emerged as the starter, then, Roberson faced another challenge - mentally preparing himself every week despite receiving very limited playing time. This time, Roberson struggled to live up to expectations.

'Wow, is this all it takes to be this good?' And over a period of

"I think Ell accepted being a back-up," offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach Bon Hudson said. "I'm not sure Ell went into the fall like I would have liked him to have gone.

Royals' 3rd baseman opts to remain in Kansas City

By DOUG TUCKER The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. - Joe Randa is one baseball player who won't let money get in the way of happiness.

In an occupation famous for greed and disloyalty, where people with $10 million contracts are quick to switch uniforms for $10,000,010, he is a citadel of Potentially, Randa stood to make many millions next year as a free agent. Instead, the Kansas City Royals' modest, solid third baseman agreed to less than market value when he signed a two-year contract extension this

"I'm a midwestern guy. This is where I belong," he said. "This is where my heart is."

He said his wife, Bethany, and their two young sons belong in Kansas City, too.

"To me, my worth is being with my family and being in a comfortable situation where I'm part of something," he said.

Randa hit .304 last season with career highs of 15 home runs and 106 RBIs. Comparable numbers this season would have sent him onto the market as a highly prized

But when he surveyed the scene and figured his best offers would come either from West Coast or East Coast teams, it turned out that third baseman Randa also was citizen Joe.

"That's how I look at it. I know my kids are going to be going through (an exceptional) school system, and I'm going to be part of the community as long as I'm alive, and my wife will be part of the community, doing charity and other things," he said.

"In Kansas City, you pull into your driveway, and the neighbors are standing around talking. We have a lot of friends here. There's a definite feeling of community. When you need a cup of sugar, it's nice to just go next door and borrow some.

Randa never has had much interest in politics, but he is a natural leader in the clubhouse. And no one would be surprised to call on Mayor Randa one day.

"I get a little bit more in touch with it every year and a little bit more attached to the community," he said. "That's important to me as a person."

Baseball season helps strengthen relationship

It's March 28, just three days away from another great baseball season.

What more could a baseball fan ask for on opening day than general admission tickets at the ballpark and a hot-looking girlfriend by his side?

What? You disagree? You think the ol' ball yard should be a place for us to congregate like the men's room, the car show or the carwash? You're probably saying something to the tone of:

"I can't even remember my girlfriend's name. when I'm watching a game, let alone try to be loving and affectionate!"

That's where you're misguided,

With a little work, she'll even remember your name, and the relationship will expand to new levels of happiness with the

The first step is to make your girlfriend aware of some changes that might occur in the seven-October that is Major League Baseball season.

who calls you her man have a lot of things in common. Share this nugget of knowledge with her and she'll understand where you're coming from the next time you cite "the game" as a reason to cut a date

The first and most important similarity between your girlfriend and your baseball addiction is the time that you put into both situations. Let me explain.

Just like your girlfriend, the game requires a certain amount of attention to obtain desirable effects. She'll understand when

"To make the most out of our relationship, I need to respect you. Similarly, respecting the game means watching all nine innings, not just the last two."

Just imagine catching only the last couple innings of your girlfriend's admission that she's traded you for a more productive player. Something like, "... and I still love you and think you're great."

Sounds good enough, especially when accompanied with a million-dollar smile and a sheepish grin, but the more important part was the one you missed. You'd probably smile, chime in with a "me too," and get shown the door quicker than the Jayhawks at NCAA tourney time.

On to comparison number two. Relationships, like baseball teams have managers. Usually the girl runs the show and allows us to feel like we have some sort of control over what's going on. Sure, we tell our friends we call the shots, but when it's all said and done, it's the manager who tells us to play the game or ride the pine. It's a dirty secret, but as long as they're happy, we're happy, so let it slide.

Next time you have her over to watch the game, try slipping something like this into your playful pre-game banter:

"Isn't this better than 'Dawson's Creek?' We're together, we're watching America's pastime and we're sharing a moment. Can I get you a hotdog or some chips?"

Finally, if she's concerned your waning interest in schoolwork coincides with the start of the season, educate her to the lessons you're learning from the game.

Batting averages, slugging percentages and ERAs help us with math, that blown save is a lesson waiting to be learned in responsibility, and a pitching ace's complete game easily can be explained as long-term commitment (use only in extreme cases).

Regardless of how you approach the situation, you'll still be counted as one of the lucky. Invite your woman over for opening day, and you've opened the door to endless summer nights of pure joy with baseball and your woman joined at the hip.

Hopefully, you've seen that baseball and the ball and chain have quite a bit in common, so cuddle up with your sweetie and share in the magic of opening day April 1 and remember - don't thank me. Thank the game.

Recycling task force proposed

Kansas State Collegian

A broad-based task force might be formed later this year that would further research a citywide curbside recycling program, Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

While it is not likely that a program will be instated in 2001, 2002 might look more promising. he said.

This is because all possible action is dependent upon the upcoming City Commission election, where three seats will be voted on, and when all involved can reach a common ground, he said.

Those voted to commission seats will determine what further action is taken on the issue.

The results of the survey. sponsored by the Riley County Solid Waste Management Committee, were presented to commissioners in February.

They found that 72 percent of the respondents were willing to pay an extra charge for the service of curbside recycling, and that the majority of those, 61 percent, would pay a $1 to $5 fee. -The survey also found that 84 percent were in favor of such a program if the pickup day was different than their usual trash pickup day, and 77 percent of the respondents already recycle.

The same committee also performed a pilot curbside recycling program from May 1990 to June 1991 in the western area of Manhattan.

Although the committee found general support for this pilot program, it still saw the need for a curbside recycling study, according to a City Commission agenda memo from the Feb. 13.

Mayor Karen McCulloh and committee member said that through the pilot program, they found people supported a curbside program, but they did not want to pay for it.

It found the estimated cost of a regular curbside recycling program would cost $2 to $3 per month for each residence.

According to the agenda memo, the committee recommended Manhattan should explore options to provide citywide availability of curbside recycling, but those recommendations have not yet been approved by City Commission.

"The commission has set as a goal to look at ways to encourage additional recycling this year," Snead said.

McCulloh said one way to. encourage people to recycle is to give a break on trash costs.

People could be charged for trash pickup per bag, and a flat fee could be charged for recycling,

This would provide an incentive for people to throw away less and recycle more.

Snead said the biggest challenge with curbside recycling is the difficulty in centralizing the task when there is around 10 to 12 independent trash hauling companies operating in Manhattan.

A program would be the most cost effective if it was strictly citybased, rather than county-based. he said.

Howard Wilson, owner of Howie's Recycling, said his recycling center could handle all the city's recycling needs, but the only way a curbside program would work is if a mandatory fee is charged - whether the resident chooses to recycle.

Hagel's campaign finance reform bill loses in Senate

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. -Senators who want to take unlimited soft money out of the hands of political parties scored a key victory Tuesday when the Senate defeated an alternative that would have limited, but not banned, such contributions.

The Senate voted 60-40 against an alternative, offered by Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., and preferred by President Bush that would have put limits on funds that corporations, unions and individuals provide the parties.

In another win for supporters of the campaign finance bill authored by Sens. John McCain. R-Ariz., and Russ Feingold,

D-Wis., the Senate rejected a Hagel proposal to triple the contribution limit on hard money, donations made directly to political candidates. That vote was 52-

Hagel's alternative was the most significant challenge to the McCain-Feingold bill, which would ban largely unregulated soft money donations to the parties and restrict political ads run in the final days of an election

"Our principal goal has been for a long time to get rid of soft money; this was the vote that got rid of soft money," Feingold said.

McCain's backers agreed to accept a part of Hagel's plan that tightens disclosure rules for political spending and advertising.

The situation, though, has changed one season later.

"In the beginning of the season, he didn't really, in my mind, feet like he could handle it mentally." Hudson said. "Now, a year later, I think there's no doubt that he thinks he can handle

Due to his new attitude, Roberson has been given the top spot on the depth chart entering spring drills. That position, however, will be immediately pressured by the new stud on the block - junior transfer Marc Dunn, who threw for 4,351 yards and 42 touchdowns with only 17 interceptions in 11 games last season at Ricks College in Idaho.

Those numbers mean absolutely nothing, though, at K-State and in the much more talented Big 12 Conference.

"There's a little bit of difference between playing Nebraska and playing Scottsdale," Hudson said. "Whether he can make that transition, that remains to be seen, but that's part of my job to get him in the position to where he can take advantage of that."

What Dunn has shown so far in the short two months that he's been at K-State has been encouraging, Snyder

"We really haven't had a chance to see Marc Dunn, so that remains to be seen, but Marc has given us every indication that he is certainly going to make it a battle," he said.

Possibly the greatest challenge for Dunn will be learning Snyder's famously complex playbook, but that might not be as difficult as one would

"The one at Ricks is very complex, also," Dunn said. "The terminology is really what separates the two offenses, I think. The play book's about equal in size, but there's just little differences in the run game between here and

While Dunn's ability to master the K-State system is yet to be seen, it is difficult to deny the athletic ability be brings to the field. Already, he has impressed at least senior running back Josh Scobey.

T've seen him throw the ball. He's got great touch on it. He's very mobile. I think he's very smart, and it's very anticipating to see what he's going to do out there when we get ready to start suiting it up," Scobey said. "I look for him to be out there competing. He's showed great poise in seven-onseven. He seems like a pretty good leader, from what I can see.

Before fans get ready to hand the starting job to either Dunn or Roberson, though, they shouldn't forget about senior Jeremy Milne, last year's third-string quarterback, and sophomore Jeff Schwinn, who showed improvement at the end of last season, Snyder said.

Right now, all four players have the chance to step into the starting

"We have great quarterbacks here. I think that's one reason why they recruited me, to come in and help this team," Dunn said. "Whether it be Ell, Jeremy, myself or maybe even Jeff Schwinn, I think every one of those guys will have an equal opportunity to

The quarterback race might be wide open, but make no mistake. Dunn will be disappointed if he doesn't earn the job.

"As a competitor, of course. You want to compete for a starting job and play and help this team to be the best. but you also have to respect the consequences," he said. "If you don't do your part, then you're not going to be able to start. I think they give you a fair shake here at K-State.

One area seemingly on the right track is the linebacking corps, which returns Leber, Pierce and senior Warren Lott, along with Josh Buhl, Andy Klocke and Bryan Hickman.

"I think every coach in America wants desperately during the course of the spring to identify a decent twodeep at every position, and we certainly have the opportunity to do that at the linebacker position," Snyder said.

Punting might be the biggest area of concern, as Snyder said he's looking for consistency at that position.

'We've got four guys here, and I'll take any volunteers," Snyder said. "It'll be wide open."

How many players will fight for a running back position is not yet set. Joe Hall, who led the Cats in rushing in 1999, has been rumored to be making a comeback.

The same is true for redshirt freshman Rashad Jackson, who rushed for 70 yards and one touchdown on eight carries in 2000. Jackson left the team last season for personal reasons.

KSU runners chosen for academic honors

Undaunted by the idea of being too old to learn. Bari Koral picked up the guitar at age 21 to play the songs in her

"I couldn't find anyone to always sing with, and I hadn't even considered actually learning to play something," said Koral, a New York-based singer and songwriter. "Then I thought, 'Ya plenty of time to learn.

Koral, accompanied by her acoustic guitar, will perform Friday at Java Espresso & Bakery for free in support of her recent album, "Joy.

Koral said as much as she loves to perform, her nerves still act up.

"The anxiety can be really big sometimes, and my yoga helps, but you need more than that to take control of yourself," she said.

The performance is sponsored by the Union Program Council's Arts. Committee. After seeing Koral's live performance at the National Association of Campus Activities, Andrea Harms, Arts Committee chairwoman, said she wanted to bring Koral

"The music is easy to relate to because it's about stuff that people go through all the time," Harms, sophomore in environmental development. said. "And she's a warm and friendly person, and that shows in her performance.

The communication Koral is able to attain with her audience is what Michael Rottinghaus, UPC president, said grabbed his attention. The basic performance memorable, Rottinghaus, senior in secondary education, said. "I honestly was not expecting much going in, but she really drew people into the performance," he said. "She's able to relate to an audience really Koral said she has come a long way since she began singing in school musicals. Koral has been featured alongside artists such as Lenny Kravitz, Lisa Loeb and The Doobje Brothers. Her career is taking off, and after starting at the age of 27, she has learned to play piano.

Styles from artists such as Tom Petty, Ani DiFranco and John Lennon have influenced Koral's style, she said. Still, Koral said she wants to do more than rehash what other artists are doing by getting inside herself to develop a unique style.

Inspiration for Koral's writing also comes from the discipline she has learned through yoga, she said.

"Yoga can create a peace of mind, as well as an understanding of yourself," she said. "It makes you more aware of other people, and I use that."

Music drew Koral's interest to the point that she quit her job with Court TV, where she was assigned to highprofile cases such as the Jeffrey Dahmer trial, to pursue her music full time, she said. After a few years of doing gigs and working in the day, Koral said the exhaustion forced her to make a decision.

"I was heading toward a nervous breakdown - I just couldn't do both anymore," she said. "Things eventually came to a head, and I chose music." The decision hasn't led to an easy lifestyle. Koral said that if she didn't have a feeling inside that compels her to write and perform, she wouldn't want to live the lifestyle.

As big of a compliment as it is to hear aspiring artists say that Koral's music has inspired them, she said it's a mixed reward.

"I love the idea that maybe I inspired an artist, but I can't help but feel guilty because I know what they'll be up against," she said. "I wouldn't wish this lifestyle on anyone."

Harms said she is looking forward only musical performance the Arts Committee has sponsored this year. The relaxed atmosphere of Java will work well for the music, Harms said.

Since she got a copy of "Joy," Harms said she has been listening to the album. After getting to know the songs, she said she is interested in hearing Koral's set again.

"Bari's acoustic sound is great live and she's great with an audience," Harms said. "She does ad-lib and just tries to communicate with the people to make it a more intimate experience."

Manhattan will be Koral's fourth stop on a monthlong tour, and she said if the audience isn't moved, she at least hopes they'll be entertained. Koral refers to performing as her present as well as her future, and she said she feels like she truly has found her place.

"This is the first time I'm making a living from performing," she said. "It took a leap of faith.

"I didn't want to spend my life asking 'What iff' I just had a desire, and I had to fulfill it."

Michigan's race-based admissions policy struck down

The Associated Press

DETROIT - Dealing another -setback to affirmative action, a federal judge ruled Tuesday that the use of race in admissions at the University of Michigan law school is unconstitutional.

U.S. District Judge Bernard Friedman, in a case closely watched by educators across the country, acknowledged there is a "long and tragic history of race discrimination in this country."

But he said the law school's goal of achieving a racially diverse student body is not a compelling state interest - and even if it were, the school has not narrowly tailored its use of race to achieve

"Whatever solution the law school elects to pursue it must be race-neutral," the judge said. "The focus must be upon the merit of individual applicants, not upon characteristics of racial groups."

The ruling conflicts with another federal judge's decision upholding a similar admissions policy used for University of Michigan undergraduates. The two cases could ultimately be decided by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The university said it will appeal Friedman's ruling immedi-

"His ruling overturns over 20 years of settled law and the practices of virtually every selective college and university in the vice president and deputy general counsel. "But we are confident that we will prevail because of the overwhelming evidence that diversity is critical to education."

The ruling was praised by the Center for Individual Rights, the conservative legal group that brought both Michigan lawsuits.

Given the millions of dollars spent by the university to defend its position, the ruling is "a huge shot across the bow for the entire higher education community," said Terence Pell, the organization's chief executive.

Affirmative action has been abandoned by universities in Florida, Texas and California, and the use of race and gender in awarding public contracts have also come under strong legal attack around the country.

The Michigan law school case was brought on behalf of Barbara Grutter, who said she was unfairly denied admission in 1997 because minorities with lower grades and test scores got preferential treat-

The law school adopted its affirmative action policy in 1992. It relies first on an applicant's grades and exam scores. But it also gives consideration to applicants who have lower scores but "may help achieve that diversity which has the potential to enrich everyone's education."

Of the 367 students in the most recent entering class at the law school, 12 percent did not report their race or ethnicity, while 10 percent identified themselves as black and 4 percent as Hispanic.

The university argued that the law school's policies comply with the Supreme Court's 1978 decision in the Bakke case, which allowed consideration of race in admissions but outlawed racial quotas.

Miranda Massie, an attorney for a group of students who intervened on the university's side, said Friedman's ruling will intensify racial inequalities.

"We don't need any institutions in this society to be reserved for white people alone," she said. "If this decision is sustained, that would be its impact."

Patrick Duggan affirmed Michigan's standards in December, saying they are a constitutional way to achieve diversity. That case was brought on behalf of two whites denied admission.

It was the Center for Individual Rights that brought down affirmative action at the University of Texas law school in 1996. The Texas school, like Michigan, argued that race-conscious admissions foster diversity. But the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that schools cannot take race into

The Supreme Court chose not to hear the Texas case because the school had already decided to end affirmative action.

you have to pay the interest," McClure said.

When Smith was a student getting a credit card was impossible, he said. Now students are offered more than many adults. This is one of the many changes that have occurred in the credit card industry.

"These companies are targeting students because they are good business for them," Smith said. "Their strategy in the game is to give students the card and wait for them to run up the bill. Then all they have to do is sit and collect the interest."

Smith said this is why it's important to be skeptical of some card applications they receive in the mail. Those aren't always the best deals.

"There's usually more to it than meets the eye. Sometimes the companies with the highest percentage rates are the most aggressive solicitors," he said. Local banks are more likely to give you some kind of a break."

Smith said students have to make sure they are accepting the best offer, not just the first one that they get.

You have to insist on no annual fee - don't accept a card that requires you to pay every year," Smith said. "There are plenty that have no annual

Students who are hasty to sign applications sometimes miss something. That's why Smith said spur-of-the-moment decisions cause trouble in the long run. Some solicitors don't always explain the terms of their contracts, and many students don't think to ask, he said.

"Sometimes students just sign the application and don't realize what they've agreed to until their card comes or they get their first statement," Smith said. "You have to read everything thoroughly."

Amy, a student who wishes to stay anonymous, graduated from K-State in 1997 with nearly $9,000 in credit card debt. She said one of the worst contracts she agreed to was from a table setup. She stopped because they were handing out a freebie.

Amy said she saw solicitors on campus offering students everything under the sun to stop and fill out an application. They give students Tshirts, hats, phone cards and even food. Amy said most students will stop just for the free stuff. She said that's what made her stop.

She signed the application and got the card in the mail. It wasn't until a year later she discovered she was paying more than she'd bargained for.

"It was kind of a spur of the moment decision. They were there so I stopped," Arny said. "A year later I got a bill for an annual fee. I didn't could've gotten more money."

Instead, design concessions were made to fit the budget, and problems arose as the results of cutting costs.

However, the problems are solvable and are being dealt with, said Steve French, assistant director of the RCPD.

"There are always going to be shortcomings with any building,' he said. "Overall, the positives outweigh the negatives."

One of those shortcomings is the lack of exterior lighting. surrounding the building.

Roger Reitz, city commissioner, told the Manhattan Mercury he found the problem of inadequate lighting after dark for the security cameras disturbing.

"The lighting was designed more for a business," French said. "Also, when you have architects that don't normally build law enforcement centers, they don't allow for exterior illumination sufficient for a

French said they are looking into the problem and getting additional lighting through KPL Gas Service.

Another issue of concern is that interview rooms used by attorneys and detectives are not properly soundproofed. "The problem is that the rooms are in close proximity to busy work areas, and the noise is disruptive during interviews," French said. He said that problem can be resolved by adding additional soundproofing. Frey said this is a prime example

He said the Tack of funding could be due, in part, to a lack of

of one result from cutting back on planning. Lack of space and crowded areas are other inconveniences the building's occupants deal with on a daily basis. Storage space and closets had to be cut out of the design to keep down costs and stay within budget restraints.

French said there is little room for officers to do their paperwork, and it gets twice as busy during shift changes.

A big priority, French said, will be parking. As of now, he said the lack of parking is a huge problem that frustrates visitors and officers.

"When there's limited funds, you don't see spending money on parking lots as effective," he said.

Frey said there is some space in front of the facility that could be converted into a parking lot.

Mastering a new heating system has also been difficult, Frey said. The RCPD went from dealing with an old boiler system to something more high tech - a computer assisted temperature control system. He said the new system will take some time to learn to control the temperatures of the individual rooms of the building.

French said the heating bill last month was $5,000 higher than anticipated.

"I think it's just a matter of learning how to operate the system," Frey said. "Our engineers said it could take up to six months to get it operational to your liking."

Even though obvious problems plague the facility, officials agree the new Law Enforcement Center is a huge step up from the RCPD's previous situation.

"Having everyone under one roof is great," French said. "The biggest problem you have in law enforcement is not having everyone in the same place.'

The RCPD went from being spread out across three buildings to

"It used to be that if patrol wanted to talk to investigators, they needed to drive to a separate building," he said, "This is a much better system."

The atmosphere also is better by having the administration, investigators, officers and patrol in one place, as well as the addition of a state-of-the-art detention system equipped to hold 127 prisoners, he said.

Frey said he thinks it's important for the county to be happy with what it received - a greatly improved facility.

"Anytime a consolidation occurs, it's good," Reitz said. Frey said he thinks people need to be more proactive rather than reactive toward the new Law Enforcement Center.

"You can learn to work with inconvenience," he said. "I'm just glad we got something built."

Barker, Kauffman look forward to next year

By JAMIE BARRETT Kansas State Collegian

Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman are trying to keep good company as student body presidentelect and vice president-elect.

"One of the first things we will do is appoint members to the Cabinet," Barker said. "We are trying to find the right people for the positions right now. We want to make sure we have quality people that are going to help us with our goals."

Barker, president-elect, and Kauffman, vice president-elect, will he sworn in early Friday morning after the last Student Senate meeting of the current term. Barker said the

They will have their first meeting of the new Senate directly after our last one," Worcester said. "They will address their goals and then begin their term after they are all sworn in."

Since they won the election March 13, the pair said they have been planning for their term in office. Barker said Kauffman has been talking to many people about Cabinet positions, along with many of the other things they are working

"There are many positions we need to fill, such as chief of staff. student life coordinator and governmental relations chair," Barker said. "That is what we have been working on right now."

Kauffman said there is an application process for Cabinet positions, and they have been trying to get the word out to students about it.

"We want people who are interested to contact us," Kauffman said.

"We have applications in the Office of Student Activities and Services and are hoping to get a lot of people to interview.

Barker said that when they take office, they are going to tackle their platform issues as soon as possible. He said one thing they are looking forward to is meeting with Faculty Senate to discuss the importance of dead week.

"The issue of dead week was one of our main issues," Barker said. "We want to hopefully get it implemented for this coming semister.

Student Senate will induct a new era of leadership tonight as the newly elected administration will take office. While a new group will be sworn in early Friday morning, current members said this last year was a successful one.

"As a group, I think we made sound financial decisions across the board," Travis Lenkner, Senate chair, said.

These decisions, he said, allowed them to gain a surplus of funds, which they will use to benefit all students by decreasing privilege fees. Fees now will be lowered from $257 to $251 for each student during the 2001-02 school year.

Volunteers assist at-risk students at area school

Kansax State Collegian

If kindergartner Michael Spaulding were asked who he sees at school every day, he'd probably name someone he and his classmates know very well.

Grace Graham, known as Grandma Cracker to students in the Bluemont Elementary Surround Room, is a staple of the Retired and Senior Volunteer Program/Leadership in Literacy. It's a program involving retired seniors and the Surround Room, a kindergarten for students who are at risk

The program, in its third year, uses the volunteers to help the kindergartners' reading development.

For the past three years, Graham has spent four hours each weekday assisting children with reading and working at the letter station to sound out and spell words.

Seeing the children make improvements is very rewarding, she said.

"Last week, this boy picked up a book and read the whole thing," Graham said. "He was sounding out new words. I was just amazed at his progress and that he could read already." When Graham works with kids in the letter station, she said she focuses on two things. "I make sure they hold the pencil right. They should always start making each letter from the top. And I want them to sound out each letter before writing it." When she tells student to write a word, she patiently waits while they sound it out. When they finally get a word, she responds by nodding, smiling and saying "Good, good." and sometimes she'll lightly pat the child on the head.

Responses Graham gets from the children is what she said she enjoys the most.

They just accept you as you are," she said.

She said they help her accept the fact that she has a disability; an aneurysm paralyzed her left arm.

"I tell them that my arm went to sleep. They always ask When will it will wake up?' and I say it will sleep 'till I die and go to heaven," Graham said. "They're helping me in accepting life as it is."

Kristi Glasper, Surround Room teacher, said the program plays a big part in the estimated 100 participants in RSVP/Leadership in Literacy.

Concert to benefit alumni victims of violence

By JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

A benefit concert in honor of three K-State alumni will be at 6 tonight at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon in Aggieville.

The alumni - two men who died and a woman who survived - were three of five victims of a random act of violence last December in Wichita.

Three months later, a benefit concert in honor of those alumni has been planned by three current K-State students who never knew the victims.

"The violence affected so many people in Kansas, let alone at K-State," said Angela Dikeman. junior in finance and concert organizer. "Nothing positive has been done, so we thought we could pull together something to give back to the families in their time of need."

Proceeds from the concert will go toward a scholarship fund at the KSU Foundation in memory of Brad Heyka, and Jason Befort, and for the medical and legal expenses of the only surviving victim, a 1996 K-State graduate. Her name is not being released because she is a rape

"We want the concert to be focused on the victims," Dikeman said. "We want to be able to support the survivor, the families and the memory of the former students. They were a part of the K-State community, and we just want to be able to honor them and their accomplishments in their life."

Befort was a science teacher and coach at Augusta High School, and Heyka worked in finance for Koch Industries.

The others who were robbed and killed were Aaron Sander, who planned to enter the seminary, and Heather Muller, a Wichita State University graduate who worked at a church preschool.

The only connection besides K-State that Dikeman and fellow concert planners Cory Powell, senior in industrial engineering, and Eric Westerman, sophomore in architecture, had to the victims were through the campus greek system.

Heyka was a member of Tau Epsilon, of which Westerman is president, and Befort was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, of which Powell is president.

The surviving women was a member of a K-State sorority.

Powell said their greek affiliation with the survivors was little motivation for the concert.

"Mainly, we just feel these people should be remembered," Powell said. "Not for the fact they were talent from groups including: Time has Come, Anyone But Them, Trip Hop Children, Effigy, EgoManics, FlyBox and Ruskabank. Admission to the concert is $3 for those over 21 and $5 for those under 21.

Dikeman said their fund-raising goal is $6,000 for the evening. "We know we have a lot of support," she said, "and we are hoping that we can raise this money. We anticipate a good turnout from current students, and I know there are people driving in from out of town just to attend."

News of the Weird

In January, News of the Weird reported that a North Dakota man had qualified under that state's law for a concealed-weapon permit even though legally blind, but that man had at least satisfied the state's reasonable shooting test by hitting a human-sized target 10 times out of 10 from a distance of 21 feet (after practice shots to get his bearings). However, in February, according to a report in the Louisville Courier-Journal, Kentucky's weapons law has also permitted at least two legally blind people to obtain licenses, and in that state, the shooter must hit the human-sized target, also from 21 feet, only 11 times out of 20.

Budget passes House, faces Senate opposition

WASHINGTON, D.C. Republicans overwhelmed the Democrats and pushed a $1.94 trillion budget for 2002 through the House on Wednesday, as President Bush's blueprint for tax cuts and curtailed spending cleared its first significant congressional hurdle.

The vote was a near party-line 222-205. Though devoid of suspense because of the GOP's thin but unified majority, Republicans hailed their victory as a triumph for their view of govern-

"The choice is between two visions," said House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas. "A vision of bigger and bigger government, a choice between larger and larger taxes or a choice of smaller government that trusts the people."

The House roll call, though, was but a warmup for a rougher test next week in the evenly divided Senate. There, the GOP not only faces near-lockstep Democratic opposition, but some moderate Republicans have said Bush's 10-year, $1.6 trillion tax cut is too big and his proposed spending restraints too stingy.

Even so, Bush said the House action made Wednesday "a big day" and said the budget's centerpiece - an across-the-board cut in income tax rates - would help all Americans.

"We need to cut all rates so that there's certainty in our economy when people plan, and I'm confident we can get this done," he said before meeting with GOP congressional leaders at the White House.

Hoping to claim the economic stimulus argument as their own, House Democrats joined their Senate colleagues and said they wanted a $60 billion tax reduction effective this year.

U.S. backs import ban. hopes to stop outbreak

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration refused on Wednesday to exempt any part of the European Union from an import ban imposed to keep the U.S. livestock industry free of footand-mouth disease.

"Obviously the situation in Europe isn't under control yet, with the continued increase in the number of cases" in Britain. Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman said after meeting with David Byrne, the European Union's commissioner for health and consumer protection.

The biggest effect of the U.S. ban, which applies to livestock and raw meat, has been on imports of baby back ribs from Denmark. The American Restaurant Association has said restaurants may run out of the item in a few weeks if the ban continues.

The outbreak began in Britain and has since spread to France, Ireland and the Netherlands, but the U.S. ban applies to all 15 of the EU's member countries. Byrne said the restriction should be limited to the countries where the disease has been confirmed.

The ban was limited initially to Britain but was expanded March 13 to the rest of the union.

'If there were an outbreak of a disease in the United States in one or two member states, the European Union's response would be to regionalize a ban to those states ... rather than to the entire country." Byrne said.

Veneman has been under pressure from Congress to tighten controls for the disease. Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., has proposed a moratorium on all livestock imports, including those from Canada and Mexico, both of which are free of the disease.

On Wednesday, Rep. Earl Pomeroy, D-N.D., proposed to ban all meat imports. Other northern lawmakers, including some Republicans, have resurrected proposals to require meat to be labeled with the countries of origin, a move intended to curb livestock imports from Canada.

"My goal is not to strain our trading partnership with the European Union or other members of the world trading community,' Pomeroy said. "However, the much larger issues of protecting our nation's livestock herds and the viability of the entire agricultural industry must be considered."

Veneman said there is no justification for banning imports from countries where foot-and-mouth has not been found.

Ecosystem preservation key to save Paraguay's forests

■ Speaker developing joint effort with K-State to research, educate.

By SHANNON MARSHALL Kansas State Collegian

Two presentations this week will give K-State students and faculty an opportunity to peer into another culture's ecosystem and way of life.

Alberto Yanosky, deputy director of Fundacion Moises Bertoni in Asuncion, Paraguay, is visiting K-State this week to work on developing a partnership between FMB and K-State.

FMB is an organization created for the conservation of the Mbaracayu Forest Nature Reserve in Paraguay.

The reserve covers nearly 65,000 hectares in eastern Paraguay and includes the last remnant of the Interior Atlantic Yanosky said the foundation not only is working to protect the land, but also to educate the people of Paraguay. As a result of the country's recent release from a 35-year reign of communism, its citizens still are learning to live with democracy.

"This is not just preserving the land. This is working with the people to empower the people to make wise usage of their natural resources," he said. "This is not something our people are used to."

He explained the importance of establishing a strong partnership between Paraguay, K-State and other universities worldwide.

"We want to meet as many professors as possible who are interested in using Paraguay as a potential field of working and who will work to preserve our ecosystems." Yanosky said. "There is an opportunity of superior education here, something we don't have in Paraguay.

Yanosky spoke Wednesday evening at Ackert Hall about research potentials in Paraguay and the role of promoting research. He will facilitate a presentation tonight for Osvaldo Carrillo, a ranger for Mbaracayu Forest Nature Reserve. Cartillu's presentation will focus on the duties of his job as a ranger. which includes fighting poaching in the forest and curbing destruction of the reserve's ecosystems

Gerald Zuercher, doctoral student in the division of biology, is working with Yanosky to encourage the partnership hetween K-State students and faculty and researchers in Paraguay. He said the benefit of the partnership is mutual.

"The partnership allows K-State to enhance its international relations in terms of dealing with research on an international scope," he said. "There is very little scientific information for Paraguay, and info that is developed by K-State will provide answers for them."

Yanosky will spend part of his week at K-State observing the ecosystem in and around Manhattan. He has already observed parts of the Konza

"Earlier this week, we went out to Konza Prairie, and Dr. Yanosky got to see bison at close range," Zuercher said. "That was something completely different from the wildlife in Paraguay."

Yanosky said his primary goal this week is to encourage members of K-State's student body and faculty to consider researching in the Mbaracayu Forest Nature Reserve

'This place has remained an island in a sea of deforestation, he said. "We need help teaching the indigenous people of Paraguay to be empowered to manage the land."

Animé festival, Asian food sampling kick off awareness month activities

Kansas State Collegian

Students have had the opportunity to broaden their horizons by learning about the Asian-American culture this month.

The month designated as Asian-American Awareness Month has existed since the Asian-American Student Union organization began more than five years ago.

Tamara Felts, freshman in preprofessional architectural engineering and president of the Asian American Student Union, said the month gives students more knowledge of Asian-American culture and heritage.

"Because you don't see many Asians around campus, there is a need to educate students on the different cultural groups," Felts

Cindy Seto, former president of the Asian American Student Union, has seen first hand the need for awareness on campus.

Seto said there have been many incidents where people will ask where she is from. When she says Kansas, many times they won't believe her and repeat the question.

"They can't believe I'm just from Kansas," Seto said. "They just assume I'm an alien.

Throughout the month, there have been several events designed to help remove the stereotypes of Asian-American students.

The month kicked off with the Festival of Nations, sponsored by the Union Program Council. Students were able to try a variety of Asian foods. There also were tae kwon do demonstrations and chopstick lessons available.

Gina Kimble, UPC adviser, said the event brought an appreciation to the Asian-American culture.

"The festival allowed students to see the diversity of other students' cultures and to be able to explore the different aspects of those cultures," Kimble said.

Derald Wing Sue, professor of ethnic studies at the University of Southern California, presented a lecture on the race relations in the 21st century.

A weeklong Animé film festival, sponsored by the Animé and Magna Society, took place in Forum Hall.

Ending out the month, "Snow Falling on Cedars," a film about a Japanese-American woman in love with an American man, will be shown at 7 tonight in Forum Hall.

John T. Shieh will present a lecture on Asian-American issues at 2 p.m. on Thursday in Union 207.

Seto said helping students, faculty and alumni to understand Asian culture has been the goal during the month's events.

"As long as it can affect one person, it's been a success," Seto

Medicinal pot users facing confrontations

Supreme Court justices, Congress openly question defense of legalization.

By ANNE GEARAN The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Supreme Court took a first look at prescription pot Wednesday, hearing arguments on an issue that has pitted the federal government against cancer, AIDS and other patients who sometimes regard marijuana as a wonder drug. As far as the federal government is concerned, marijuana is illegal and should remain so. Federal enforcement efforts have led to confrontations and arrests in California and other Western states. The issue for an openly skeptical Supreme Court is whether trumps a 1970 federal law that classifies it as an illegal substance with no known medical value.

President Bush supports federal prohibitions on marijuana, but also respects states' rights to pass voter initiatives, as was the case in California, spokesman Ari Fleischer

"The president is opposed to the legalization of marijuana, including for medicinal purposes," he said Wednesday.

Lawyers for the Oakland Cannabis Buyers' Cooperative in California want to make what they call a medical necessity defense in federal court and argue that federal judges and juries have the power to decide if the drug is warranted.

Several justices seemed to think that approach was a stretch at best. "I thought the medical necessity defense was for an individual,"

Justice Antonin Scalia said. "You would extend it to the person prescribing the drug, and even to opening a business," to dispense it.

"That's a vast expansion beyond any necessity defense I've ever heard of," Scalia said.

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy seemed to agree.

"You're asking us to hold that this defense exists ... with no specific plaintiff before us, no specific case," Kennedy told the club's lawyer, Gerald Uelmen.

The court's rolling is expected by the end of June.

A ruling for the Oakland club would allow special marijuana clubs to resume distributing the drug in California, which passed one of the nation's first medical marijuana laws in 1996.

The case is United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers Cooperative, 00-151.

As alumni, would you be willing to donate $50 to $1,000 for increased football ticket prices?

If the athletic department really wanted to cut down on their own budget, they could stop giving their athletes all of the perks, such as giving them money to go out and buy clothes. But no, instead we just have to increase prices and require donations. Thanks a lot, K-State.

I would be surprised if anyone who graduated from this pit could afford a $1,000 donation for season tickets.

Why in the world would anybody donate $50 to $1,000 for football tickets when we get taxed for everything else? Five-dollar parking tickets, $20 parking tickets, $10 to get in Silverados. What else is next?

My predictions for next year's football season: empty seats.

Is it just me or are the fountains outside the Union the least impressive waste of money you have ever seen?

It boggles the mind to hear that the athletic department wants to raise men's basketball tickets in the near future. I got free tickets to the Iowa State game, and I still felt like I had been jipped.

I was just wondering if the department of continuing ripoffs was open tomorrow so I can go and take another class at Fort Screw You?

You know, I've heard quite a bit about the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund. Why, you could ask any student and they could tell you what it goes to: our athletes. But does anyone know what the scholarship fund is for our students that are here for their education?

That thing in the Union courtyard is an automatic water fountain? I thought it was a trough urinal.

I would just like to say that I drink Natty Light, and I am proud of it.

The Riley County Police Department needs something better to do than drive around at four in the morning and write traffic tickets. Like maybe they could find out who is driving through people's yards.

Am I stupid or did the credit card article cut out in mid-sentence?

I'm tired of seeing Tom Hanks pee.

Well, I think someone is missing the boat here. I think President Bush is being a compassionate conservative because he is protecting us from all of these environmental laws that seem to overprotect the environment.

It's 11 o'clock at night. I just got a parking ticket. Don't these people have to sleep?

This is a public-service announcement: Today is the last day to wear spring break t-shirts because by tomorrow no one really cares where you went anyway.

This is directed to the person who called in about the jackhammering starting outside of the residence halls at 9:30 in the morning. I would just like to say that in the real world, after you graduate from college, you will have to get up a lot earlier than 9:30.

As a poor college student it was really wonderful to find an e-mail advertising $79 pork bundles for sale, especially considering I am vegetarian. Thanks, KSU meat lab.

Why do teachers insist on giving us homework this week? Don't they understand that we are still in a daze from spring break?

Surviving loss

Sympathy, understanding needed in coping with death

When I was in the sixth grade, my cousin was killed in a car wreck due to drunk driving. I remember feeling helpless as the realization set in that nothing, absolutely nothing, I could say or do would bring her back to life.

The feeling returned when I was a senior in high school and one of my friends was murdered as part of a gang initiation. It returned again when my aunt lost her battle to breast cancer. Every time there is a death, it is so hard to know what

I always thought that once I was older, more mature, I would know what to say to make everything better. To be the comfort that can be found in a kiss to a child's injured knee, to be the light that lifted up one;s heart and make all of the darkness be sucked away.

Yet that hasn't happened. I was helpless when we buried my grandma in October and even more helpless when we buried my grandpa a week and a half ago.

And every time with this helplessness there is an hurts me physically and is prompted by my selfishness that I still want them to physically exist. The most difficult part of dealing with death, or trying to comfort others who have experienced a loss, is knowing what to say. However, there are some things people need to learn not to say. When I told one of my friends about my recent very unexpected loss of a wonderful, vibrant man, he made a reference to 'kicking the bucket.

Another of my friends made the comment after finding out that my grandma, who also was one of my closest friends, had lost her battle with cancer by remarking, "Did she finally die?" Also it doesn't help matters when someone makes a comment like, "At least you have "I know exactly how you feel," because chances are, they might not. Some of the many things that can be done include the following: Send a card listing ways that you are willing to help. Continue to send cards occasionally, as well as yourself available to them. Be a good listener. This means listening to things they both do and don't say. Call the survivors when they are in your

Don't avoid those who are left living. Dying is not a plague that can be caught from talking to someone who is in mourning.

Tell them how sorry you are for their loss, and mean it. The word 'sorry' can sound empty, but if the intentions behind it are candid, it can be a word of sincere sympathy.

Life is such a colorful, beautiful experience that sometimes it is difficult to cope with the darkness, the emptiness and the helpless that can be found in dealing with death.

Follow your heart to help those who need it most; the ones who are still living. And please don't use the term 'kicking the bucket.' It can make a hard time, even more difficult.

Day, date, time join for April Fool's confusion

Have you built your emergency April Fools Day bunker yet?

BECKY WILSON/

Collegian

I'm not a big fan of the day myself. I tend to appreciate the little things-remember the year when the newspaper cartoonists swapped characters? That was cute. And I always liked reading those mistakes the editors and writers would accidentally sprinkle into the Collegian - just to test your perception, of course. But everything else seemed either malicious or annoying, so it's usually a day I just dig in and endure.

But this year, April I falls on a Sunday, and doesn't that just suck? No April Fools Collegian (which is why we've been spreading those little goofs out through the entire year:

Sunday also is the arrival of daylightsaving time. Maybe you're rested enough to see the light-hearted side of losing an hour of sleep only to get it back (without interest) in the fall. Maybe you are. but I think we should put this whole "spring forward" thing to a vote right here and now.

Funny thing is, that's just what's been happening in Indiana. Only three states actually don't observe daylight-saving time, Hawaii (understandable), Arizona (they were late to the Martin Luther King Jr. Day party, too, so let's just save them a seat and wait for them to park the car) and Indiana.

Well, Indiana's a little perplexed on the issue. It's bad enough that the state's occasional befuddlement which results. But right now only five of Indiana's 82 counties in the Eastern time zone and all 10 of the counties in the Central time zone observe daylight-savings time.

Throw in leap-years, the Julian calendar and the 24-hour clock and you've got full-bore hardcore chronological chaos. Tempus frangit. Hourglass sands swirl upwards. Clock hands wave hello. Cuckoo clock birds simply pop out and bark, "What the hell?"

So Indiana's tossed up the idea several times of moving the entire state to daylight-saving time - still torn between two time zones (if you just started singing or muttered "feelin' like a fool" under your breath, I demand you bang your head on your desk really, really hard, or else I'll send the squirrels), but otherwise in line with the national consensus. But it keeps failing. The most recent attempt got shunted back to committee, where it's expected to wait patiently until the end of this legislative year.

C'mon, Indiana. Conform. Embrace the hive-mind. All your clock are belong to us. Joinnnn usssss. It's blissss...

Y'see? It's comforting to know that no matter what happens to us Sunday, we won't be the real April Fools.

Program helps build communities

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Kansas State Collegian

Strengthening Kansas communities is the overall mission of the K-State Community Service Program's Kansas Summer Teams.

The program develops teams of four that work eight-week terms around the state, where they eat, sleep and breathe the town in which

Students going on the eight-week work excursions now are taking an independent study course, where they do a community plan of the community they will work in.

The program began in the late 1980s and will continue this summer with the the 2001 installment of volunteers. The program gives participants valuable learning experiences, and volunteers say its rewards are not financially oriented.

"We receive a small stipend for the work, but what you earn isn't monetary," said Robin Eubanks, senior in general human ecology. "Nobody does this job for the money."

The students live with a host family for the summer, and the work sites span cities big and Sometimes the experience itself can be a culture shock, Rebecca Wood, a 1996 participant, said.

The field seemed enormous on the Kansas ranch that summer, Wood said. She said she remembers taking nightly walks on the Meade County ranch, and she could watch weather systems develop in the sky. One night she could see up to five storm systems forming.

"We receive a small stipend for the work, but what you earn isn't monetary. Nobody does this for the money."

- Robin Eubanks, senior in general human ecology

Wood also participated in the family's activi-

"I even went with my host family to a tent revival," she said. "It was interesting to see."

The revivals and long walks, Wood said, was icing on the cake after a day of volunteering. She was working in Meade, with a population at the time of around 5,000 people, and said she enjoyed the hands-on experience. "It gave me hands-on experience in a community setting, rather than a classroom setting," Wood said. The experience has played a significant role in her career. Wood has worked in a variety of positions involving community development, and she now works in as a K-State learn and serve coordinator. She is helping other K-State students continue the process, and the 2001 summer will involve K-State students working in the community

This will be a chance for participants to give something back to Kansas.

It is a program that sends groups of four to five K-State students into communities around and allows them to perform community service projects. The projects include revitalization efforts in downtown communities, working in communities and obtaining historical histories

They also study rural communities and discuss issues specific to the host community. The students also spend time visiting their summer community and regularly read the towns' newspapers.

The program continues in the fall with a reflection seminar on campus.

Last summer, Eubank's summer team worked in Glascow, Kan., and it was an experience she said she would recommend to others,

"I think it is a wonderful experience for anyone wanting to work with people someday." Eubanks said.

Abby Hall, sophomore in public relations, will be taking part in the program again this summer. Last summer she worked in Manhattan on a variety of projects that included surveys and a community walk for the city that still is in the works for the future.

This summer she is working in Liberal, Kan., on a variety of projects including the history of potential historical houses.

Her previous experience allowed her to grow, she said, and she improved her ability to work with others.

"I think the experience last year taught me how to work with other people," she said. "When you are working eight hours a day or more, you kind of have to all work together."

Cheer squad to conduct workshop for area high school students

By SHANNON BURKDOLL

Kansas State Collegian

The K-State cheer squad hopes to start a new tradition this weekend when they launch the first K-State Cheer Experience workshop.

Stefanie Howard, varsity cheerleader captain, and other members of the cheer squad, will be working with high school juniors and seniors Saturday to improve their motions, co-ed stunts and extensions in preparation for college tryouts across the nation.

The workshop will be divided into co-ed stunting, motiontechnique and tumbling, starting at 8:30 a.m. in the Brandeberry Sports Complex.

The workshop also offers a student panel that will answer the high school students' questions about college, cheerleading and life at K-State.

"We're selling K-State as a whole, not just cheerleading," said Howard, junior in elementary education and electronic journalism.

The K-State Cheer Experience stands out from other cheerleading workshops because it offers an opportunity for the high school students to learn about coed college stunts and prepare for K-State cheer squad tryouts, said Mike Finnegan, admissions representative and former K-State yell

"There's actually a science on how to cheer correctly," Finnegan

The workshop also will stress different avenues the students can take at K-State to continue their cheer career.

"They can keep cheering through the developmental squad. and we're thinking of starting a cheer club," Finnegan said. "It's an opportunity to get seniors and juniors in high school interested in the squad and K-State.

Damian Hilton, K-State cheerleading head coach, said the K-State Cheer Experience is an opportunity for high school cheerleaders and their parents to experience the difference between high school cheerleading and college cheerleading.

"I think it's important the parents understand the time commitment cheerleading requires," Hilton said. "If their kids are going to cheer, they need to understand from the get-go what their kids are getting into.

Finnegan and Hilton said they expect 30 high school students to attend the workshop, but 70 students registered for the K-State Cheer Experience.

"It's going to be a long day," Hilton said. "I think the majority coming are female, and our guys are going to get a workout. I am used to coaching, but I may have to get in on the stunting as well."

Howard, Finnegan and Hilton said they believe the K-State Cheer Experience could become a tradition and be offered to younger high school students in the future.

"This is just a stepping stone," Hilton said. "Our first goal is to get people interested in Kansas State.

Patterson pleased with season

By DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

It was Jan. 3, and head coach Deb Patterson had more to celebrate than the dawn of a new century.

In her fifth year as the Wildcats' head coach, Patterson saw her team begin the season with 10 wins in 11 games, the school's best start in 17 seasons. The Cats as K-State ended the calendar year with an undefeated 7-0 record in the month of December.

"It's a pleasant surprise to get off to a good start. Every day we're finding aspects of our game where, whether we win or lose a game, we need to improve in," Patterson said after her team's start. "I feel like it's great to have a ball club that, in spite of all the areas where we need to get better, we're finding a way to win."

Future star Nicole Ohlde made a name for herself early in the season, leading the team's scoring attack in six of those contests. The Clay Center, Kan., freshman also led the Cats in rebounding seven times and registered doubledoubles on three occasions.

"What's really impressive to me about her is that she has done what she should do through the course of the season," Patterson said later. "Her numbers have increased, and she's become a better defensive player overall.'

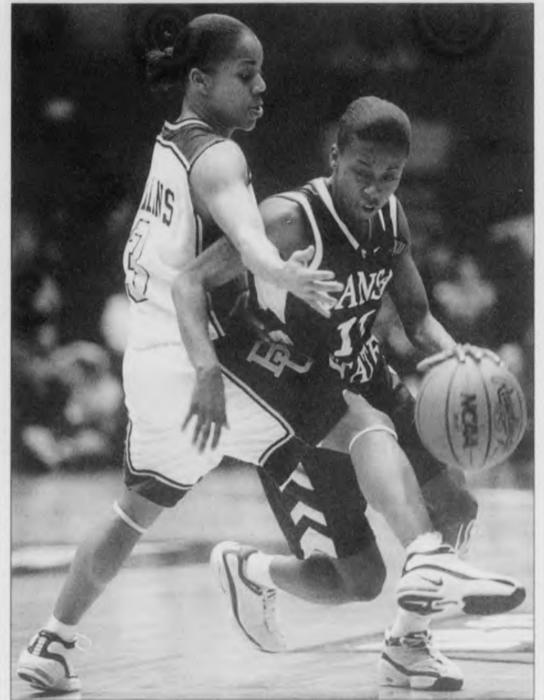

Part of a celebrated class of newcomers, Ohlde's potential became reality Nov. 24 with a 36 point, 19 rebound performance against Wyoming in a 73-70 overtime loss to the Cowgirls in the Beaver Classic. That class also included the Big 12's preseason Freshman of the Year, Laurie Koehn, who was forced to sit out the entire season with a nagging

Still, with Ohlde exceeding expectations in her rookie campaign and long-range shooters Kim Woodlee and Kristin Rethman connecting with deadly accuracy from behind the arc, the loss of Koehn was a small setback as the Cats closed the book on 2000 with high hopes for the rest of

However, when the Cats took the Bramlage Coliseum hardwood against lowa State in early January to open Big 12 action, they must have had little idea what the rest of the season would have in store for them.

K-State would endure its worst conference start since 1993, dropping four straight to the Cyclones, Colorado, Nebraska and Kansas to open Big 12 play before finally tasting victory Jan. 17 against the then-No. 17 Texas Longhorns.

In ruining Texas head coach Judy Conradt's recordsetting 1,000th game, the Cats used Rethman's 24 point effort to gain their first conference win of the season.

made the senior nervous.

The highs and lows of the 2000-01 baskethall season mimicked a roller coaster ride for head coach Deb Patterson's squad. Here's a quick look at how the Cats fared this season.

Nov. 17, 2000: K-State begins the season with a 62-49 win over UMKC at Bramla Coliseum. The Cats' record in season openers at the purple palace improves to 10-2.

Nov. 24: In only her second game as a Wildcat, Clay Center, Kan., native Nicole Ohlde records her first collegiate double-double with 36 points and 19 boards. Ohide's effort against Wyoming was two points and one rebound short of school records in both categories.

Dec. 5: Against Western Michigan, the Cats set a school record for three-pointers in a game with 15 bombs, five of which came from senior Kim Woodleg.

Jan. 3, 2001: K-State's eight-game winning streak is snapped against then-No. 7 lowa State. The Cats' record in Big 12 openers falls to

Jan. 13: Despite junior Kristin Rethman's perfect performance from the field and charity stripe in scoring 22 points, K-State falls

78-67 to Kansas in Lawrence, extending its losing streak to four in a row. Jan. 20: K-State earns its first Big 12 win of the year in Texas head coach Judy Conradt's 1,000th game. The Longhorns become the 10th ranked opponent in the last five years to lose

Jan. 27: Bramlage Coliseum is filled with the second-largest crowd in women's basketball history. 9,127 fans attend as K-State falls to

Feb. 3: Woodlee becomes the 26th player in Wildcat history to score 1,000 points by scoring 14 in the Cats' less to Oklahoma State, KU, 65-62 in the teams' rematch from Jan. 13.

Feb. 7: Rethman moves into second place on K-State's all-time three point list behind Woodlee in a 63-54 loss to Missouri.

Feb. 10: With 28 points and 10 rebounds, Ohlde records her fifth double-double of the year, but K-State falls for the 10th time in 11 tries.

March 2: Ohlde, who, during the season, earned the Big 12's freshman of the week honor three times, is named the 2000-2001 Big 12 Freshman of the Year. The 6-foot-4 forward broke freshman records for points and rebounds in a game, and points, rebounds and field goals in a season in her first season as a Wildcat.

Wooldridge to release forward

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

Sophomore reserve forward Donnie Wallace will not return to the K-State basketball team for the 2001-02 season, head coach

Jim Wooldridge said Wednesday.

"We appreciate Donnie's contributions to the program over the past two seasons and wish him the best of luck in the future," Wooldridge said in the press release.

The 6-foot, 9-inch Wallace, a 2001 firstteam Academic All-Big 12 selection, came to K-State as a USA Today honorable mention All-American, but saw limited playing time as a Cat. As a freshman, the Goddard, Kan., native averaged 6.4 minutes in 16 games. He also averaged 1.2 points and 1.3 rebounds.

This season, Wallace appeared in 18 game but scored in just one contest - a threepoint performance in a season-high nine minutes in a 82-56 loss to Nebraska.

Wallace scored a career-high five points against Kansas last season.

Women's golf team finishes 7th in Texas meet; men take 9th

K-State's women battled the cold and rain to place seventh at the Baylor/Iowa Spring Shootout in San

Following Monday's opening-round of 308, the Wildcats shot a 325 Tuesday to compile a team score of 623 at the par-72, 5,925-yard Pecan Valley Golf

Elise Carpentier led the way with a 15th place tie, aithough the sophomore was tied for fourth after 18 holes, shooting a round of 74. She finished with a two-

Two strokes behind Carpentier was Christine Boucher, who notched a 19th place tie, while Edie Murdoch rounded out the top-25 with a tie for 24th

Head coach Kristi Knight said there were several factors the played into K-State's struggles Tuesday, as the Cats added 17 fearn strokes to Monday's first

"We struggled with the bad weather today, but we also had some putting problems," Knight said Tuesday.
"I saw us miss putts from 2-4 feet. A couple of girls just didn't have their best day today, but that's golf."

On the men's side, the Cats finished ninth in the 14-team Colorado-Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Stevinson Ranch, Calif. K-State sat in eighth place after Monday's 36 holes, but the team's round of 319 Tuesday dropped them one spot in the final standings. Yet, the squad still managed to finish ahead of two Big 12 foes, Missouri and Iowa State, while Kansas and Colorado finished

No. 1 and 2, respectively, in the meet. A.J. Elgert led the K-State men, placing in a tie for fourth place after shooting a two-day total of 224. Elgert's 73 on Tuesday, the third-best round of the afternoon, helped him jump seven spots from 11th place in the final day of action.

Matt Williams and Aaron Watkins both tied for 30th in the meet, the only other Cats to place in the top 40.

Newman breaks school record with 10.26 seconds in 100m

Sophomore Terence Newman's 100 meter time of 10.22 seconds at Saturday's Baldy Castillo Invitational in Tempe, Ariz., set a new K-State outdoor record. Newman's time, good for third place in the event, broke his week-old record of 10.26, which he set the previous weekend in Tucson, Anz., at the Willie Williams.

Other top performers on the men's side in Tempe include Clinton Jamison, who took third in the triple jump, Joseph Lee's seventh place in the 800 meters and a fifth-place effort by the 4x400 relay team. For the women, Korene Hinds ran a NCAA provisional qualifying time of 2:07.38 in the 800 meters, placing first in the meet. In addition, Queeneth Evurunobi took second place honors in the triple jump, Terresha DeRossett was third in the high jump and Teena Clincy clinched fourth in the 100-meter hurdles and sixth in the triple jump. Cate Hoiston also placed third in the 3,000-meter steeplechase (a new event for women), Rebekah Green notched eighth position in the discus, and Leslie Mikos rounded out the top-10 performers with a career-best 10th place finish in the hammer.

Heptathlete receives Big 12 Athlete of the Week honors

K-State heptathlete Austra Skujyte was honored as the Big 12 Outdoor Track and Field Female Athlete of the Week, the league office announced Monday.

The award came after Skujyte's first place finish in the heptathlon at the March 22-23 Baldy Castillo Invitational in Tempe, Ariz.

In the meet, Skujyte scored a NCAA automaticqualifying 5,596 points, 128 points better than the second place performer, while leading the field in the shot put, long jump and javelin. Her heave of 50 feet, 2.50 inches in the shot put was also a NCAA provisional qualifying mark.

Form&expression

Topeka artists display work in Aggieville art store

By REBEKKA MARTIN

Kansas State Collegian

Expression through exploration is the focus of two Topeka artists whose show officially opens at Urban Designs on Friday.

Both artists are exploring forms that appeal to a lot of people," Urban Designs co-owner Deborah Minner said. Glenda Taylor and Patricia Nobo will be featured in the "Capital Imports" show at the Aggieville art store. "It just kind of plays on that they're from Topeka."

Urban Design's other co-owner Doug Minner said. The display of Glenda Taylor and Pat Nobo's work will open with an open house from 5 to 8 p.m. Friday at Urban Designs. Taylor, who will be showing ceramic pieces, has been working with clay since high school. She said clay provides a familiar medium with which she can explore ideas.

The artist said that although she began working with clay in high school, Angelo Garzio, her master's degree instructor at K-State, aided her understanding of form and expression. Yoshi Ikeda, head of ceramics, added to her use of utilitarian form, Taylor said.

Taylor is the chair of the Department of Art at Washburn University in Topeka. She said she now is influenced through her professional associations because the interaction with other artists spurs ideas.

Taylor, who has been included in group shows at the Mariana Kistler Beach Museum of Art, said she will be showing utilitarian-based ceramic pieces, most of which are high-fired porcelain. The work includes platters, teapots and lidded containers.

"I also consider them expressive." Taylor said. The pieces have a geological look and appear to show effects of erosion, wind and water, as well as fossils

"I react to landscape," Taylor said. "I like the platters because I like the ability to put the little fossil things in and have them showing.

This technique is evident in Taylor's fish platter in the show. The platter's surface has a ripple effect, and even the edge of the plate is waved. The focal point of the piece is a fish fossil imprint. The platter is finished with a traditional shino glaze.

Taylor said she also wants to do more exploration with the lidded form. Her shortest lidded container is her favorite piece in this display, she said. Despite the utilitarian attributes of the pieces. Taylor said her art is about exploring beauty.

"I think everyone will get something different." Taylor said. "I'm very much interested in making things that are beautiful."

Nobo's pieces are monotypes and monoprints. Monotypes transfer ink from a plate to paper

"You can't repeat the image," Nobo said. With monoprints, part of the image can be repeated, but the image is variable

Nobo's prints contain an element of the unexpected since she applies ink to her plates at home and then creates the images in an art class she takes at Washburn.

"You're continually dealing with surprises." Nobo-

Nobo said she has a couple of copper plates and one that is plexiglass, but does not have a press.

"I made use of the model that they have for the class because I don't have my own press," she said. "I make the image by removing the ink with various tools."

Besides brushes, some of the tools Nobo said she uses Q-Tips and forks to achieve the desired effects.

After the plate goes through the press, Nobo said she sometimes continues to work on a piece using mediums such as paint sticks, oil paints and pencils.

The pieces Nobo has on display show contrast between some prints with and some without extensive reworking. "Prefiguration," a skeleton print, has no additional reworking. "Repose 5," however, received a lot of work after going through the press.

'No matter how the image is changed, people still see the human image in it," Nobo said. "I'm interested in the response I get back from people. It tends to surprise me sometimes."

Doug Minner said both artists' works are colorful and positive.

Doug Minner said the "Capital Imports" show will continue through April 21, and all pieces on display are for sale.

AlBo glass and the jewelry and rosaries of Kanen Lauseng continue to be displayed.

"They go with the organic nature of Glenda's pieces," Deborah Minner said of Lauseng's pieces.

古古古古古

The hot site on many Web browsers lately has been "Hot or Not," an ingeniously simple site that lets users find out what other people think of their looks

From the perspective of a looks critic, the site will suck up time just going from photo to photo with friends with an excuse to be totally superficial. It's great fun with a simple bar where you choose a rating of one to 10 for each person.

Some of the people who submit pictures to this site really probably shouldn't. Sure, the site discourages looking on the inside for what counts, but it's too entertaining to pass up. So submit your picture, and just hope it gets better than a 1.8.

To get plugged into the latest information on to the same is more comprehensive than Polistar. An immense database stores information on aim of any band you can think of and if they are on tour the dates are listed. The database is easily acceptable by artist, city or venue. Besides tour dates, the latest stories on tours are available on the site. Whether AC/DC is rallying huge numbers, or tour dates are canceled due to a sore throat, this site has the story. Searching for tour dates is extremely easy compared to the Ticketmaster database or searching for official band sites for information. This should be on anyone's bookmarks.

"The execution tonight was the best it's been all season," Rethman said following the 72-63

"The screens were great, and they were finding us when we were open."

After watching her team struggle to master the basics in its previous four outings, Patterson said she was pleased with how her team approached the Texas

"For us, the thing that was most important was, we took the floor with the intensity and single-minded focus to handle our responsibilities," she said.

"That means more than who we beat. It means more than what their ranking is. We needed to step on the floor and play a 40minute game with intensity and

But those same elements later would disappear from the K-State attack as intensity, focus and execution proved elusive for the Cats following the upset win.

The Cats would finish with just two wins in the Big 12, the second coming Feb. 20 against Texas A&M at Bramlage Coliseum.

Even senior Kim Woodlee's record-breaking 275th career three pointer couldn't spark the Cats in a Feb. 17 loss to the Nebraska Cornhuskers, K-State's eighth straight after upsetting the Longhorns. Frustration and disappointment were obvious after the game as Woodlee played the shot down.

'So what?' is how I really feel," said Woodlee, the Big 12's all-time leader in three-point field goals with 283.

"My success didn't translate into team success, so it's a positive, but I can't really enjoy it. Success of the team means a lot more to me than breaking records."

K-State's 12-15 record and first-round exit in the Big 12 tournament at the hands of sixseed Baylor didn't break any records this season, either, but with another talented group of newcomers expected to shine for the Cats next year, Patterson said she hopes to restore some swagger to the women's basketball program next season

"It's just a bright light of hope that flashes before your eyes because you understand the magnitude of athletic and basketball talent that is going to be on the floor for us," she said. "That is extremely encouraging on paper and in concept."

illustrate the quality of their play, as you did in your final season at Indiana. Then blast your players when they leave the program, citing mental and verbal abuse.

Knight respects no one, not even the physically disabled. In his most famous tirade in 1985, he winged a chair across the court, nearly hitting people sitting in the wheelchair section.

Lack of respect for others isn't the only one of those useless childhood lessons Knight doesn't live by. Practically the only thing he remembers from the book,

"Everything I Needed to Know, I Learned in Kindergarten," is how to throw a tantrum. Perhaps the only adult feeling he ever shows is vindictiveness. That's the only possible explanation for his pending lawsuit against Indiana University, which charges, among other things, mental anguish. How dare those bastards over at IU fire . Knight after nearly 30 years of service.

So what if he repeatedly "embarrassed the university" or "broke the law?" The mere fact that he won three national championships should justify Knight's actions. Ignore the fact that he only advanced past the first round of the NCAA tournament twice in his final six years at Indiana.

The end justifies the means in Knight's world, and so far, it has made him a very happy man.

He's got a good job in a warm state at a school who supports him and his behavior, evidenced by the 10,000 cheering fans that showed up at the press conference at which he

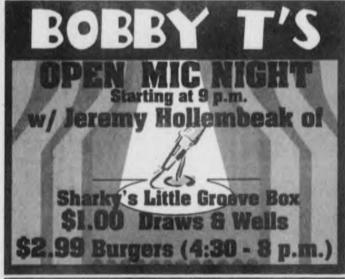

So the next time Knight throws a student photographer into the bushes or kicks, chokes or headbutts one of his own players, causing you to question his sanity or the safety of those around him, know this when Knight leads Texas Tech into Manhattan in 2003, I will feel no fear at the post-game press conference.

"In a regular classroom, they could be overlooked. They're given the opportunity to come in here and have the one-on-one attention they need to stimulate learning," Brinkman said.

The students feel comfortable asking the seriors questions, he said.

"It comes down to giving them a sense of encouragement - letting them know that they can do this."

Retirees can share their experiences in life with the kindergartners through volunteering, Brinkman

"In a learning-like setting, they convey their sense of the world," he said. They convey a sense of understanding because many of them are in the same low economic situation as the students."

Shelly Roben-Lojika, assistant coordinator of student services and activities, said the amount of money organizations make on such agreements varies.

"Sometimes they get a flat amount, and other times it's based on how many applications they pass out," Roben-Lojika said. "That's an agreement that's made between the organization and that company."

"This is the first time that anyone can remember, in a good many years, that privilege fees have gone down," Lenkner said.

He said not only did they decrease privilege fees, but they also didn't have to cut any programs. In fact, they were able to use bond surplus funds to work on three projects: putting all-weather turf on Memorial Stadium, making Forum Hall more accessible and helping pay for Hale Library's Infocommons Phase II.

Other highlights of the year revolve around advising, Ryan Walker, privilege fee chair, said.

Now, in the future, students will be able to get the kind of advising they need," he said. "That is critical to the student's success."

During this term, Senate also proposed a referendum to build a student activities center. Though it was voted down by students, parliamentarian Bobby Allison-Gallimore they have sponsored such companies, they are given a certain amount of money for the number of applications they turn in.

"The more applications you turn back in, the more revenue you get," Motycka said. "You want to try to get as many students as you can to stop."

Roben-Lojika said many companies request information about finding student organizations to sponsor them.

Though sponsoring companies to solicit credit card applications on campus sometimes means big money for organizations, it might not be an option in the future.

If the bill in the Kansas Legislature is passed, students won't encounter credit card companies on campus. The bill would prevent credit card issuers from soliciting individuals to apply for credit cards on university campuses.

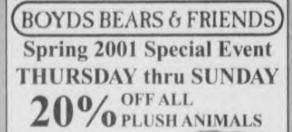

Organizations who sponsor credit card companies as a way to raise money don't think legislation is necessarily needed because it is an individual's choice whether they stop. Motycka also said if the bill is passed, it would take away a good way for them to raise money.

"We could find other ways to get the revenue, but I'd hate to see any options eliminated," Motycka said. "If people don't want to stop at the table, then they don't have to."

Rep. Rocky Nichols, D-Topeka, said he understands the money organizations make by sponsoring these activities is important. However, he said these student organizations should realize that such sponsorships could be harming their peers.

"I challenge student organizations to question what cost their fund raising is coming at. Students credit ratings are being hurt and several are going into debt." Nichols said. "Is this how we want to raise money, or is there a better way?"

Monte McClure, senior in education, knows how hard it is to pay off maxed-out credit cards.

Two of his three cards are maxed out, and the other is in pieces in a dump somewhere because he finally paid off the $3,500 balance he was carrying

According to a national survey by the loanprovider company Nellie Mae, McClure isn't alone. The survey shows that college students carry an average of $2,748 in credit card debt. The study also shows that one in four students with credit-card debt owes more than $3,000, and that nearly 10 percent are over $7,000 in debt.

Fred Smith, accounting instructor, said many students lack the discipline to manage credit cards wisely. Poor management, he said, leads to debt that students don't have the disposable income to pay off.

"If students are merely making their minimum monthly payments, they're just paying the interest." Smith said. "You can't pay a card off like that."

for students to avoid running up debt is to pay the entire balance on credit cards at the end of every

"Students have to try not to charge more than they can afford," Smith said. "Refuse to pay interest by not carrying a balance at the end of the month. That's the only way to stay ahead of the debt." Although there is no location for students to turn to on campus for debt consultation, there are other places to go for help.

cash advances at the ATM. They have as much as a $5 transaction fee, and often, interest starts collecting from the moment of the withdrawal until the first payment

III Insist on no annual fee credit cards. Call credit card companies and ask that they remove the annual fee. Also, ask that the interest rate be lowered. In many cases, it is documented that just by calling and asking for a lower interest rate, they will give it to you if you have a good credit

Watch out for no grace periods from the purchase date this means interest charges start accumulating immediately. Also, watch for immediate interest charges or cash advances and

The stepbrother of Brad Heyka smiled and said it was the perfect environment for a benefit concert.

"Brad would have loved this. Seeing the lead singer wearing a KISS T-shirt and people having a good time is something he would have enjoyed," said Mitch Watson, Heyka's stepbrother and Manhattan resident. "He was a die-hard KISS fan and a really great guy."

The benefit concert was in honor of three K-State alumni who were victims of a random act of violence last December in Wichita.

"The idea was that these people were being remembered as victims," said Cory Powell, concert organizer and senior in industrial engineering, "and we wanted to be able to remember them in a more positive light.

This concert was the first step." Proceeds from the concert will go toward a scholarship fund at the KSU Foundation in memory of Heyka and Jason Befort, and for the medical and legal expenses of the only surviving victim, a 1996 K-State graduate. Her name is not being released because she is a rape victim.

"We want to be able to help the families and the survivor move on," said Eric Westerman, concert organizer and sophomore in architecture. "This is something that is real simple that we could do."

Privilege fees to be reduced next year

By LUCAS SHIVERS Kansas State Collegian

Due to increased enrollment projections and efficient management of current resources, a $6 reduction in student privilege fees is scheduled for the fall 2001 and spring 2002 semesters, said Ryan Walker, Student Senate privilege fee chair.

Pending Kansas Board of Regents approval, fees will be reduced from $257 to $251.

"We strive to keep privilege fees at the lowest possible costs for students," Walker said. "This year, a reduction was the most responsible action."

Individual fees from different campus areas are reviewed on a three-year rotating cycle. The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, Bramlage Coliseum, K-State Student Union restoration and repairs, operations and Union Program Council were the agencies up for review this past year.

None of the reviewed areas will face funding cuts due to increased enrollment expected for next semester, Walker said.

"There will be no reduction in the amounts that fund these agencies," Walker said. "We were able to maintain funding at current levels."

Keeping prices in check, former Student Body President Jake Worcester said the privilege fee reduction would balance out some of the recent increases in tuition.

"With the additional increases in tuition, we must do everything we can to keep the overall cost of higher education low, Worcester said. "Value is extremely important.

Trouty's to reopen with new license

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas State Collegian

Barely two weeks after O'Malley's Alley reopened to the public, Rowdy Trouty's in Aggieville will reopen for business today as a 3.2 bar. Trouty's closed almost one month ago after the bar lost its license.

Ryan Sawyer, manager of Trouty's, refused to comment on the conditions surrounding the loss of the license and the closing of the bar, but said he thinks his customer base will return to normal.

"I doubt it will affect business," he said. Somer Patterson, Junior in English and Trouty's employee, said the details of the bar's closing weren't disclosed to the employees. Patterson said she thinks it could be due to the fact that the bar doesn't have a kitchen, and thus has no income from food sales. Riley County law states that food sales must make up at least 30 percent of a bar's total income to stay in operation.

The bar, after closing, had to apply for a completely different license in order to Regardless. Trouty's will reopen as a 3.2 bar, meaning no liquor or five/six-point beer will be served.

Owner Mike Trouty couldn't be reached for comment.

Tickets sales going well for Destiny's Child concert; 1,000 seats remain open

By CORBIN H. CRABLE

Kansas State Collegian

The city of Manhattan and K-State will rock with soulful sounds when Grammy Award-winning R&B group Destiny's Child performs in concert at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

So far, there has been much enthusiasm for the concert, even though it has yet to sell out, said Jim Muller, associate director of Bramlage.

"We're very pleased that we've sold what we have," he said. "We hoped to sell the show out because this is such a great group."

Muller said there still are about 1,000 seats left, and tickets are being sold at Bramlage, Streetside Records in Aggieville and the K-State Union

Jenny Payne, service counter assistant at the Union Bookstore, said sales have been steady.

"Sales are doing pretty good," she said. "The floor seats are full, and most of the open seats are in the back."

These seats, however, still put fans close to the action, Muller said,

"Most of those seats are toward the back of the house, which still puts you 150 feet from the stage," Muller said. "That's good, compared to Kemper Arena. Here, the floor seats are 45 feet below the upper section, so even our seats at the top are great seats, if you look at it that way." While there still are plenty of seats left, ticket sales were booming when they first went on sale in early February, Andy Houston, manager of Streetside, said.

"The first day was just insane," Houston said. "There were tons of people here, and there was a line outside the building that stretched for half a block."

Houston said that in addition to ticket sales. Destiny's Child album sales at Streetside have risen as well. due to the anticipation of the concert.

"A lot of people have been buying the 'Charlie's Angels' soundtrack, and a lot of their first CDs have sold so people will know the songs when they get to the concert," he said.

Not only have ticket sales remained steady, he said, but sales for the Destiny's Child concert have outsold other upcoming popular concerts. These include N'Sync, which will make a stop in July at Kansas City.

Question of the week

Q: I would like to get involved with community service somewhere. I have a lot of talents and would like to share them by teaching or doing something similar, but I am not sure where to begin. Any suggestions?

A: UFM has many programs and is always in need of volunteers. They are looking for instruc tors to teach classes in car repair, sewing, photography, bike repair and watercolor painting, among many others. To get information on becoming an instructor, call UFM at 539-8763.

Students spend night fighting for homeless

The entrance of the K-State Salina campus was converted into "The Box Village" Wednesday night.

Students created the village near the circle drive west of the gate entrance of the campus and spent the night in their cardboard boxes to bring attention to the problem of homelessness in the Salina community. The project also assisted in collecting needed items for the Salina Rescue Mission.

The students are just trying to emphasize a problem to our community. It's a good way to spread awareness," said Roger Steinbrock, public and alumni relations coordinator at K-State-Salina.

leff Ganna, freshman in aviation, said the cold weather will. play a significant role in the project.

People don't think about what the homeless go through on a nightly basis," Ganna said. "I hope that us being in the cold all night will make more people think about what it's really like.

Ganna, a member of the Brotherhood Fraternity, said its main goal is to create awareness, but it is also a good way for the fraternity to support itself.

"Awareness is definitely the main goal," Ganna said, "but it alsopromotes the unity of the brotherhood. That's also important."

Students asked that everyone bring canned fruits and vegetables, coffee or toiletries to the village.

The project is sponsored by the Salina Student Government Association, Brotherhood Fraternity and the Salina Rescue Mission.

Rap artist announces name change on MTV

NEW YORK - Sean Combs says he's not blowing smoke - he's getting rid of his much playedupon "Puffy" moniker.

The rap mogul, who was acquitted earlier this month of bribery and weapons charges, told MTV News on Wednesday that he's dumping the nickname when he comes out with a new album.

"I'm not doing it as serious as Prince: I'm not just going to be crazy with it," he said. "I just need a fresh start. That's all."

So what will be his new rap. name? Actually, he said be will just take one of his other nicknames -P. Diddy. The rapper said he can even envision a name change ceremony, with another beleaguered celebrity helping him out.

"So probably, like, the first week in June we are going to have a name-change ceremony. Clinton is probably going to change my name. Bill Clinton. I like his style. Combs said. "He is a survivor, they went at him, he is still standing." - The Associated Press

Orchestra to capitalize on Rev. Phelps' protest

TOPEKA - The Topeka Symphony Orchestra, a frequent target of the Rev. Fred Phelps' antigay pickets, plans to use Phelps' next appearance as a fund-raiser.

The symphony is asking people to pledge money to the orchestrafor each minute Phelps and his followers demonstrate outside of White Concert Hall before its April 21 concert.

In a laxed release Thursday. Phelps said his Westboro Baptist Church - largely made up of family members - would pledge $1 per minute.

"WBC wishes the Topeka Symphony Orchestra well," I'helps said in the release. That's why we picket them."

Survey students warm to weather

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Adam Barnard and Beth Wanek, both sophomores in landscape architecture, survey campus behind Anderson Hall Thursday afternoon. Barnard and Wanek are In Elements of Survey Engineering.

By SHANNON BURKDOLL Kansas State Collegian

Brian Peterson and Chris Schmidt said they are glad the snow has melted and spring finally has rounded the corner because now their surveying lab is much more enjoyable

"It's nice to be outside for three hours out of the day," Peterson, junior in construction science, said. "I think the class was only canceled two to three times due to rain or snow."

The elementary surveying class meets every Tuesday and Thursday in Durland Hall before students scatter to their assigned buildings to measure angles and elevations with surveying equipment.

The class teaches the students how to quantitatively measure topographical details of a building or landscape using a set of points set by the U.S. Geological Survey to gauge the measurements, James Wagner, lab instructor, said.

The surveying equipment includes a theodelite, a level-like device used to give three different measurements, levels, tapes and a range pole. Each group of four students uses the equipment to measure the marked points around their assigned building.

"In the beginning of the semester, we measured our building which is Denison, with the most basic tools," Tim Duggan junior in landscape architecture, said. "Throughout the semester, we have progressed to using more advanced tools, and by the end of the semester we will have a total breakdown of Denison.

After the students have collected all the measurements they need for each assignment, they return to Durland Hall to enter their data in surveying field books and compare results.

Surveying students face challenges other than the weather when they are measuring the buildings - such as pedestrian traffic.

"People don't realize what they're doing when they walk between us," Peterson said.

"It is most aggravating during passing period," said Schmidt, junior in construction science, "especially when we are in the middle of shooting a measurement."

The surveying class is a requirement for many engineering and landscaping students that is not considered a favorite, the instructor

"It's time consuming," Wagner said. 'I always wanted, when I took this class, to get in there, have someone tell me what to do and get out there and do it because it's so time consuming."

Although the course is time consuming, Julie Vavra, senior in architectural engineering, said shehas not faced too many challenges in the course.

Vavra is one of three women in her lab class and one of the few women in the industry.

The industry hasn't caught up with the times," she said.

"My freshman year. I worked in construction." Vavra said. "They treated me with the utmost respect. It totally changed my view on construction workers. I think sometimes they get a had rap, but they really have to know what they're doing. I think it changes an engineer's perspective when they have to step up into the construc tion worker's shoes in this class."

Senate focuses on primaries

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Kansas State Collegian

K-State student body elections will have a primary next year, andit is a system that will replace the general election and runoff system now in place.

Under the bill, all candidates for offices ranging from college councils to student body president and vice president first will participate in a primary and then a general election. Former Student Body President Jake Worcester said this will increase not only voter turnout, but interest in the general election as well. They voted down a bill introduced last week that would ban chalking on campus during elections.

Student Senate also will be lowering privilege fees for next year from $257 to $251. Privilege Fee Committee Chair Ryan Walker said the decrease comes as a result of a fee surplus.

In other action. Senate passed a bill that opposes House Bill 2153 in the Kansas House, a bill that would ban credit card solicitors from campus.

Business Sert Lucas Bucl said on-campus credit cards gave him the opportunity to get a credit card.

"I got a good credit card from a service here on campus," Bucl said.

Those in opposition to the bill said they acquired numerous debt from credit cards "Yes, people are capable of making good decisions, but they are capable of making dumb decisions. I have the credit card statements to prove that," Arts and Sciences Sen. Steven Freund said. "I am not the only one."

Education Sen, Dave Woodruff

said the bill infringed on his enjoyment at the university. He is a member of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, which does not allow credit card solicitation, and he said he appreciates that rule.

"We live in the community. This is our home - we should not have solicitors coming up to us in our home," Woodruff said.

He said groups that receive funding through the cards still could get funding through other efforts. Senate voted the bill down, 32-15.

Senate also passed several points of clarification to the constitution. It voted to allocate money to the Muslim Student Association and the Arts Therapy Club.

During the meeting, senators honored various people ranging from several senators to Athletics Director Max Urick to Worcester.

Fort Riley soldier arrested

■ Vehicle identification by robbery victim leads K-State police to suspect.

By BRYAN SCRIBNER

Kansas State Collegian

S'Loam Johnson, a Fort Riley soldier, was arrested at 4:45 p.m. Wednesday in connection with a robbery that occurred on campus Saturday.

K-State Police Capt. Robert Mellgren said the campus police arrested Johnson. He said information gathered from Chris-Christensen, the robbery victim, led them to the suspect.

Christensen, assistant director of admissions and financial aid. was robbed at gunpoint outside Fairchild Hall at 8:55 p.m. Saturday. Christensen said he was getting out of his vehicle when three black males approached him. One man held a gun, and he was asked three times for his wallet.

The suspects fled the scene in a vehicle when Christensen complied with their request. He said be immediately reported the robbery and the vehicle's license number to the campus police.

Mellgren said it was not known if Johnson held the gun. The other two suspects have not been apprehended, but Mellgren said the investigation is continuing.

In an interview earlier this week, Mellgren said the crime was one of only two or three that he could recall within the past 10

"I think this was more or less an unusual occurrence on campus," he said. "We hope it. doesn't happen again."

18 killed in Colorado plane crash

By STEVEN K. PAULSON

The Associated Press

ASPEN, Colo. - A chartered airplane crashed into a hillside Thursday at an airport in this ski resort town, killing 18 people. authorities said.

The Gulfstream III plane was en route to Aspen from Los Angeles International Airport, said Allen

Kenitzer, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman in Seattle He said 15 passengers and three crew were on board.

Kenttzer said he did not know whether any distress calls were made before the crash. The National Weather Service reported light snow and mist in the Aspen area Thursday night.

Wreckage was strewn over about 100 yards. Two passengers still were strapped to their seats when they landed on the highway, and one man was sprawled on a hillside.

The hodies of all 18 people aboard were recovered, said Marie Munday, a spokeswoman for the Pitkin County Sheriff's Office.

Lyewitnesses saw the airplane go down at the Sardy Field airport shortly after 7 p.m.

We're online again... Buy your student football and basketball tickets on KATS

A few quick questions (and answers) re: the process...

- WHO'S ELIGIBLE? K-State students enrolled for Fall 2001 hours.
- WHERE'S THE SITE? The Marketplace is located within the KATS site on the KSU home page at www.ksu.edu.
- HOW? Any student having access to a computer, on campus or off, with a web browser will be able to access the KATS/Marketplace and order student season tickets.
- WHEN? Right Now! You may buy your season tickets at the same time you enroll on KATS. A schedule is again located on the KATS page if you need to see a specific access date and time.
- WHY SELL THIS WAY? Last year's experience proved the KATS system works! No long lines and the ability to purchase from home or campus locations. If you have a computer with a web broswer, you're there.
- IS THERE A PLACE I CAN GET ADDITIONAL INFORMATION AND VIEW THE SITE AHEAD OF TIME? Yes, there is a FAQ page on KATS that has information on a range of topics. And while you won't be able to complete an order at that time for your ticket, you'll be able to view the choices and get familiar with the KATS/ Marketplace site.
- IS THERE SOMEONE I CAN CALL REGARDING QUESTIONS? Yes, you can call the Athletic Department Ticket Office at 532-7606 or the toll free number, 1-800-221-CATS, for additional information.

K-State needs guidelines for card solicitors here has been recent debate on whether credit-card companies should be able to solicit on campus. There will not be any final decisions made until next

Part of the debate stemmed from the fact that a lot of universities, including

K-State, will not report how much money they receive for allowing such companies to set up booths on campus.

The credit card companies should be allowed to solicit on campus. After all, students who are old enough to attend college should also be mature enough to read the fine print and realize that what they purchase with the plastic, they will eventually have to pay for. And most likely, along with the payments, there will also be added interest. Also, using the credit cards excessively, without paying them off, will provide a bad credit history for students.

However, most of the companies aim at underclassmen who might not understand this. That is why universities should have restrictions on what the companies are allowed to do. The companies need to explain to students, who might be after the free t-shirts, the responsibility that comes with having a credit card.

K-State doesn't have a free organization to help students deal with debt. This is something that should be implemented because it is an important education tool.

Question for Tuesday: What would you like to see the new Student Senate at K-State accomplish?

THE LOVE CRAZE

Relationships, single life can be used as learning tools

There has been a healthy amount of banter in this week's Fourum, sparked by a comment made on Monday about couples walking on campus holding hands.

Here is the original quote for those who might have missed it: "To all those couples who walk across campus holding hands: Are you that unsure of the stability of your relationship that you have to show all of us? Get over it. This is not high school."

Upon first reading this quote, I was a bit stunned and a little put off. While understanding the premise, it seemed a little harsh. But never fear, the cliché Collegian columnist has decided to broach that subject we talk about at least once a semester ... dating.

When I first came to K-State, I felt surrounded by couples. Not just surrounded, but suffocated. The air was so thick with the love vibe I felt myself struggling to breathe.

I would see them in the library studying together, whispering and holding hands, at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex working out or sitting in class together making out. My favorite encounter with one was in the Moore Residence Hall elevator (that was one of the many times in my life I wished I would have had a paper bag to put over my head). My freshman year I started to believe that there was some memo they put in the freshman information packets stating that to be recognized as an official student, you had to be engaged or dating someone. The biggest shock for me was when I moved in with my roommate during my freshman year. I can't remember now, but she was

MICHELLE BERTUGLIA

This girl was a sweetheart. We both grew up in the same general vicinity, but she lived on a farm, and I lived in the city. As she explained it to me, she had always been taught growing up that getting married was the end all, be all of life. She would look at me with her far off gaze and tell me about how she could not wait to be his wife, bear his children and how someday soon they would buy a farm together.

When she started doing the girly thing of telling me her plans for the wedding - the colors, the flowers, the kind of dresses the bridesmaids would wear - she would flow over with a bubbling excitement that would make my stomach churn. No matter how much I loved and supported her, I could not understand how she could be ready for marriage. I was almost a year older than her and I still had not grown out of the boys having kooties stage. My mind would just over-load with confusion. She was willing to sacrifice every part of herself for this other person and I, an older more worldly woman (right), could not even figure out how to iron my clothes, let alone have a serious relationship. Yet she, at 18, had it all figured out for both of us.

Once you live in a place for a while, you become immune to certain things. After living here for four years, I don't see the public display of affection as much as I see the real relationships. While at first it was disturbing and icky, I now look at the lovecrazy people around me and find it comforting. One day I woke up and realized that almost everyone I know is either getting ready to say their vows in the near future or had at least found the one they planned on saving them with. My culture and environment has taught me well. Once I came to this realization about my friends, I had a brief "Cathy" period of freaking out. If everyone I knew was with "the one," how was it that I was such a freak and generally found myself standing as one?

But once I started breathing again, and dispelled the irrational "Cathy" thoughts from my head, I realized just how damn lucky I was to be surrounded by all of these people who were secure enough in their relationships to hold hands on campus and make life commitments to one another.

As I see it, I have been lucky to sit on the side lines for so long. I have had this amazing opportunity to sit and watch, learn and see what being with someone is really like. Each one of my friends' relationships has its own color and shape like a grain of sand. Picking up a handful of them and getting to look at these grains of loving relationships up close has taught me the infinite beauty of a beach and this phenomenon called love.

I have wiped away too many tears from a friend's face and experienced too many gushing moments of utter happiness for my friends to not have learned a thing or two about love. For those who have it, I say flaunt it. It brings hope to the rest of us.

Social club grateful for help at fund raiser in Aggieville

I am writing to thank the many parade goers and the Aggieville merchants and their employees who purchased baked goods from the Kansas State University Social Club in front of Streetside Records on March 17. The club, begun in 1911 for faculty wives, and now expanded to include males, has always found ways to aid students in some manner.

The money collected supports two scholarships: 1) The Edna S. Young -$500 for a full-time, adult student; named in memory of Mrs. Paul Young who was on the scholarship committee and served as club president twice. 2) The K-State First Ladies - $250 for a part-time, adult student; named to honor the wives of our 12 presidents: Frances Denison, Nannie Anderson, Charlotte Fairchild, Marie Will, Marguerite Nichols, Margaret Waters (Club Founder), Effie Jardine, Mildred Farrell, Helen Eisenhower, Janet McCain, Shirley Acker and Ruth Ann Wefald. We are very gratified by the number of people who donated the change from their purchases, especially the young-

President reflects on successes

When we were 5, one year seemed like an eternity. When we were 15, it was the roadblock between us and that magical driver's license. In college, it's seen as two semesters with a three month break in the middle began our term as student body president and vice president. At the time, the year stretched out before us and seemed a little overwhelming. We had a whole year to make noticeable improvements to the university.

But somewhere between the Kansas Board of Regents meetings, the drafting of advising legislation, the exciting football season and city meetings about rental inspections, the year disappeared.

It was apparent that our one year to serve K-State was a brief, but valuable slice of time. Our desire to accomplish the purposes we outlined for the student body during our campaign increased.

That desire was surpassed only by the appreciation we felt toward the students of K-State for letting us spend a year serving them. It has been an honor for both Dana and me to dedicate our last year at K-State to trying to make the university even better for those just beginning their time here. The year flew by because we never stopped - never stopped seeking new ideas, listening to students or having a lot of fun.

We also never stopped learning. Not every idea we presented was right or best for the university at this time. We learned from student and faculty feedback. We learned from unexpected results and obstacles that faced us. Through it all, we learned the importance of staying. focused on objectives and remaining true to our beliefs and promises.

The fact that we are now looking back on our year intensifies the question "Where did the time go?" But, looking back also indicates our focus to improve the K-State experience. And these advancements will not end with our term, but continue to benefit the students of K-State as they focus forward. Advising. Starting as soon as next fall, students will be involved in giving feedback on advisers in every department. This feedback will be used in evaluating advisers and improving advising across the campus.

Hale Library Infocommons. More. than 100 more computers were made accessible to students as a result of the Infocommons in the library. The efforts of SGA will make the second phase of this project possible next year.

Transcripts. The hassle of ordering transcripts will soon be over. Students and alumni will have the ability to make transcript requests online beginning in the next academic year.

Rental inspections. Our efforts have increased student awareness about rental inspection rights and processes and brought the issue to the forefront. The city is currently investigating several options to assure the availability of safe rental housing in Manhattan. ■ Facility improvements. Sports clubs and student organizations will have access to the new all-weather playing surface at Memorial Stadium, and the funds to make Forum Hall handicap accessible have been approved.

Decreasing of student fees. For the first time since the 1994-95 student government term, student fees will decrease next fall. Fees will drop six dollars per semester due to sound fiscal management by SGA.

Although Dana's and my term has seemed very short, we are proud of the changes we have helped bring about and the progress that has been made. In the blur of the past year, changes have been made and we believe students have benefited.

But there's no reason to continue looking back. The new leadership of SGA has innovative views and an intense passion for learning and getting

Dana and I look forward to coming back to campus and viewing the products of our administration's efforts as well as the efforts of those that will

This year has been one that Dana and I will always remember. And one that we hope K-State will not soon

Annual blood drive to begin next week; goal set at 850 units

K-State students and faculty can donate blood starting Monday for the annual K-State American Red Cross Blood Drive.

Donations can be made Monday through Friday at the K-State Student Union, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Putnam Hall basement.

Stacey Huerter, blood drive student coordinator, said the five-day blood drive goal is 850 units.

"We usually hase our goal off last semester's results," Huerter said. "Last semester we didn't reach our goal. We came very close. There were 866 units. and our goal was 875. So we lowered our goal just a bit."

Nancy Powell, American Red Cross Representative and Donor Resource Consultant for the K-State blood drive, said 850 units of blood would not necessarily mean only 850

"Eight hundred fifty is the actual To give blood number or units," 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. she said. "The blood may be given back to hospitals in their hometown, to people they know. People have known others who have needed blood. That is the biggest reason they should give," she said.

Powell said the main reason why people do not donate is because they were not personally asked. She said she encouraged students to take the time to donate.

Construction, chalking causing concern for club teams

Forum Hall and the all-weather turf were areas that received the money.

While the turf will allow teams to play year round on it, some are concerned about finding places to play during construction and how lines for their sports will be placed.

We are working, though, to make sure the furl can work one way or another, even if that means temporary chalk for lines," he said,

Wacker said if the field and fines can conform to what rugby and specer need, then lacrosse would be able to use it, too.

Worcester said the administration still is looking at different options for exactly what type of allweather turf to use. A starting date for construction on the field has not been set yet, but it should be completed by fall 2002. Lights for night games and fencing also will be added.

"We have deals with the athletic department, and we are getting closer to more final decisions, but we are still working through it all," Worcester said.

Until construction begins, teams can still practice on the current grass. When it does begin. though, teams need to have another location to practice,

"Until the construction, it gave us lots of exposure," Wacker said. "People could drive down past the stadium and see us in our furmy looking shirts, passing a bloated football, and have their curiosity sparked."

He said they are working on finding a new place to have practices when it does begin.

"We are in touch with the city of Manhattan for new practice space, and they have been more helpful than K-State," he said.

Regular grass needs to be game-ready, but with the band and sports practices, it's worn out faster," he said. "The all-weather turf will allow for practices to be held and for the field to still be game-ready."

Worcester said the new turf will last for 15 to 20 years, much longer than regular grass.

"Il requires less maintenance than grass and lasts a longer time," he said, "It will be a great addition to the stadium.

Wacker said he hopes details will be addressed soon.

KELLY GLASSCOCK / Collegian

Kathy Chuda returns a serve in K-State's last home match. The Cats will return to Manhattan this weekend to take on Colorado.

Tennis team still looking for identity

Kansas State Collegian

After finishing a road trip that included matches against two top-30 opponents, returning home against unranked Colorado should be a breeze

On the other hand, K-State (6-6, 2-2), despite its No. 44 ranking, hasn't really proven itself this season, either, head coach Steve Bietau said.

"We're looking at this as a match that we obviously have to take seriously. Wereally haven't defined who we are by our results yet. We've beaten a lot of teams soundly that are below us, and we've comea ways above us as far as the rankings are concerned," he said, "but there's a big gap in there, and we don't know where we fit." While K-State's 1-2 record over spring break isn't spectacular, the Cats did receive individual performances that could carry over against Colorado.

At No. 1 singles, for instance, Alena Jecminkova had struggled to play well because of health problems, but improved her play in the final road match at Pacific.

"I think the real positives from that match were in the singles performances - Alena bouncing back from not being real healthy and not dealing with her lack of health real well in the previous two matches. She came out and had a real gutsy kind of performance," Bietau said-Her ability has never been questioned. but just how tough she is and how well she handles some adverse situations has been in, and she did a great job;

Truth is, when you get down to the end of the season, there's lots of athletes in lots of sports that aren't able to practice a lot, but mentally get themselves ready to go and still go out and play anywhere from pretty well to very well and that's where she is right now."

Against Colorado, Jecminkova will face sophomore Dominique Lemperle, whom the junior already has faced twice before, a loss at Colorado last spring and a win at the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's Central Region Championships last fall. That previous experience can be both good and bad. Jecminkova said.

"It's good because I know what to expect. Sometimes it's easier when you know your opponent. Sometimes it's good, but sometimes it's bad," she said. "You can get scared and give them too

K-State will face another challenge from the Buffs' No. 3 singles, Lia Dimingo, who has seen success this season after moving up in the lineup. The Cats' No. 3 singles, Eva Novotna', said she pays little attention to records.

"I don't go into matches thinking that the players had a great season, this is her record, that's why it's going to be tough," Novotna' said. "Every single match is tough because from now on we don't play any weak teams. We just play either the same level or better teams that we are.

"Of course, you can go into the match expecting that you're going to get a good match and then just play your best,"

A possible edge K-State has over Colorado is its doubles play, which has improved throughout the season. Bietau said.

"I feel good about our doubles teams. We've had different people step up at different times and we've shown that we can be solid at all three positions," he said. "If we play well at all three positions, we'll be tough to beat."

K-State looks to maintain good hitting performance in game against Baylor

Kansas State Collegian

Prior to K-State's 9-1 victory at Creighton on Wednesday, the Cat baseball team was facing a dilemma - it couldn't drive in runs.

In its three-game series with Texas A&M, K-State scored just six runs despite racking up decent numbers of hits. The Cats just couldn't string hits together to produce runs. Against Creighton, however, that all changed, head coach Mike Clark said.

"We hit the ball up the middle, the other way, had a lot of line drives. We really had a great approach. Hopefully, we can build off the positives we had," he said." We hit the sweet spot of the bat more in one day than we have in three weeks, and that's the positive reinforcement we needed with these guys."

K-State will especially need that offensive momentum heading into its threegame series at Big 12 leading, No. 21 and Baylor starting today. The Bears feature a 2.35 team ERA, and their starting pitcher today. Steven White, has given up just five earned runs in 46 innings pitched.

"Baylor presents some unbelievable problems for us in that their pitching staff is unbelievable," Clark said, "putting up the numbers they're putting up in college baseball today. The guy we're going to see Friday has a .98 earned run average in seven starts.

"It's going to make every at bat that we have real important. We have to not get intimidated, not back down, not start doubting our stuff, but really believe collectively that we're going to do what it takes to get the job done."

Leading the way offensively recently for K-State has been third baseman Ty Soto, whose 16 RBI tie for the team lead.

"He's got 30 less at bats than a lot of our starters who have started all season and leads in RBI's, and really in RBI situations, has probably given us more quality at bats than anybody on the team," Clark said. "Ty's done a wonderful job. He's got great bat speed. He's learning to play third base, and that's tough to learn a position and also see the type of pitching that he has.

Osmar Castillo throws to first base after fielding a ground ball against Texas A&M last weekend in Manhattan.

'Ty makes great adjustments. He's one of the few guys on the team that all through this has used the whole field."

To allow their bats a chance, though, K-State will have to avoid falling behind early in the game and losing mental focus, Clark said.

"It's real important we keep the games low scoring and then hope we can get a big inning each game where we knock across three or four runs, or on the other side of it, piece together a run here and there," he said. "They can be beat, but we first have to believe we can beat them."

The pitcher charged with containing Baylor today is Luke Robertson, who sports a 4-3 record and 4.79 ERA. On the mound Saturday will be Kevin Melcher. who hasn't won a game, but gave up just one run in a 1-0 loss to Texas A&M last week. Jared Brite, 1-0, 1.84, will take the mound for the final game Sunday.

While putting the clamps on Baylor's potent offense won't be easy, the Cats aren't intimidated, Melcher said. "I'm very excited about going down to Baylor. I think the whole team is pumped up and ready to play and can give Baylor a run for their money. I think the team's got a good mental attitude, and we'll go in there and definitely compete," he said. "Whenever you walk on the field and you're the underdog, it pumps me up even more just to tell them that we're there to play baseball and send them home with three losses."

K-State basketball coach turned down for head position

The University of New Orleans hired Santa Fe Community College head coach Monte Towe as its new men's basketball head coach

That might mean very little to most K-State fans, but for one of the finalists for the job, it will. K-State associate head coach Mike Miller was one of three finalists for the New Orleans job, joining Towe and Texas Christian assistant Scott Edgar,

Miller was recommended to the New Orleans coaching committee by current Chicago Bulls head coach Tim Floyd, who formerly coached at UNO, according to K-State men's basketball sports information director Shawn Nestor. Miller, who was head coach at Southwest Texas before coming to K-State last March, was contacted about the job earlier last week. "They contacted me last week, and I went to New Orleans for an interview," Miller said. "The job was intriguing to me with the success they've had there in the past."

The chance that one of his coaches would be contacted about other positions didn't surprise K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge

NBA head coach Karl courted by big bucks

Fourteen million dollars to coach basketball. In the words of "Seinfeld" lawyer Jackie Chiles, "That's deplorable, unfathomable, intolerable."

DEREK BOSS

Maybe so, but welcome to the life of NBA head coach George Karl.

On Wednesday, sources say the Milwaukee Bucks handed him a two-year contract extension totaling that very amount, making him the highest-paid coach in professional sports.

And it's not about the money, they always seem to say.

But let me back up a bit. Nowadays, it's not too uncommon to hear about top coaches inking contracts in the $10-$15 million range, but these deals usually span over a long period of time — usually six to 10 years. So when a guy like Karl is walking away with that much in a couple seasons of work, you begin to wonder - to put it bluntly what the heck is going on up north?

Are Wisconsin cheese sales really doing that well? I doubt it (although it is damn good cheese), so instead, let me fill you in.

Karl, who turns 50 in May, is in the third year of his original four-year, $20 million contract. And he's done quite well with his team, too. After taking over a program that hadn't posted a winning record or NBA playoff appearance in seven seasons, Karl led the Bucks to postseason play in each of his first two campaigns. Plus, this year, Milwaukee looks poised to win its first Central Division title in 15 years.

So, did owner Herb Kohl simply decide to reward Karl for his quick turnaround of the program with a hefty sum of money? You wish it were that easy. No, no, my friend - here's a little lesson on what speculation is capable of doing.

Originally, he was planning to extend Karl's contract this summer so it didn't disrupt the Bucks squad as it ran for the division crown. But as rumor had it, Karl was waiting for head coach Mike Dunleavy to be fired in Portland so he could take over the Trailblazers' job, as Karl once worked for Portland general manager Bob Whitsitt in Scattle.

Hmm ... so what's the moral of this little story? That blown-out-of-proportion rumors and gossip can make you $14 million richer?

Wrong. In Karl's case, it's actually even more than that.

In addition to the two-year contract extension, Kohl sweetened the deal by giving Karl part-ownership of the Bucks organization. Sources say the Milwaukee coach will get a small slice - believed to be 1 to 2 percent - of the franchise, which is valued at $125 million.

Now we're talking outrageous, ludicrous, absurd, preposterous (any of these will suffice, or you can fill in the following blank with your own personal favorite ). We're talking about that much green just to coach in the NBA? I mean, you could buy a whole country for that much money. There are starving children in thirdworld countries that ... um, actually, I'll save you the agony of going that route.

Simply put, it just doesn't make sense unless you look at the escape clauses in Karl's two-year deal.

These clauses indicate Karl would be allowed to leave Milwaukee if the Bucks (a) win the NBA title after next season, or (b) if the job at Karl's alma mater, North Carolina, opens up again (Kohl didn't allow Karl to interview for the Tar Heels' position last year after former K-Stater Bill Guthridge departed). And who knows how Matt Doherty's job is looking after UNC got knocked out of the NCAA tourney by Temple in the second round?

Looks like Milwaukee just wants some quick success, and Karl isn't a bad one for the job. He's coached 1,101 games at the NBA level and has won 661 of them, serving stints with Cleveland, Golden State and Seattle besides the Bucks job.

At any rate, though, whether Karl deserves that much dang money is beyond me. I admit I don't have the authority or expertise in what it takes to coach professionally (or at any level, for that matter), yet I have a hard time believing its worth that much.

But at least we'll get to watch Kohl sweat like a pig in his fancy Armani suit when playoff time rolls around. Then we'll get to see how big of an idiot he really is.

Halls unveil 'EcoRun 2001'

By ANGIE JOHNSON Kansas State Collegian

Strong Complex residents hope to make a difference as they sponsor a 2.1-mile charity run/walk through the Konza Prairie Biological Station.

On Saturday, residents from Van Zile, Boyd and Putnam halls will be host to the first "EcoRun 2001," With hopes of becoming an annual event, the residents have worked hard to seek maximum involvement.

"We are the smallest dormitory complex, and we wanted to find a way to stand out and do something different," Kyle Barscewski, senior in management, said.

All profits raised from the event will go to the Mid-Kansas Free Mammography Program, an organization that conducts research for breast cancer treatment and promotes breast cancer awareness.

"Our intentions are for everyone to become aware and help prevent something that affects both males and females," AJ Bradley, sophomore in mass communications. said. "By contributing, we hope a cure can be found.

Besides a $10 charge for each entrant, area businesses including Safari Jack's Watering Hole, Varney's Book Store, Streetside Records, Pathfinder Bike Shop, and Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque, have supported the event. Safari Jack's has agreed to split their Saturday night profits with the charity event.

"We are very overwhelmed with the number of participants we have," Barscewski said. "We thought we would be lucky to raise $100, and we have already more than topped that with tremendous help." Residents said they chose the Konza Prairie location because it serves as a key part of the ecology that surrounds Manhattan, and it often is ignored. Most students have no clue where it is, Bradley said.

"The Konza has been taken for granted, so we thought it would be a different and beautiful place to hold the event," she said.

Participants will meet at noon Saturday in the Van Zile main lobby to register, fill out a release form and receive a T-shirt

From there, they will carayan to the Konza and begin the run/walk

"I am excited to participate in an event that is both held in a unique location and serving a great cause," Ty Harvey, junior in civil engineering, said.

Commission candidates favor rental registrations

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Kansas State Collegian

A new Manhattan City Commission this April likely will need to tell city staff how far to go with the controversial mandatory rental inspection issue.

When last brought before commission during a Feb. 13 work session, several students, landlords and citizens supported or opposed the idea of a cityimposed mandatory rental inspection program. The meeting ended with commissioners directing city staff to investigate a system to register, not inspect. rental properties in the city.

Sammi Mangus, assistant to the city manager, said an expanded registration system would include information like the legal address of the property and the owner's name, but the rest still is being worked out. The city now registers only rental units with more than three units. she said, leaving a lot of work to do on other units.

"We have no idea how many basement apartments there are, Mangus said.

For now, she said, staff is looking at ideas with the fire department staff, but has no specific deadline yet. Further direction will be provided by the commission, she said.

Candidates for commission all said they support registration, but vary in thoughts about mandatory inspections.

"I'm for registration," Commissioner Roger Reitz said.

Manhattan's recent housing study only estimated rental properties in the city, he said. A. registration program would check the accuracy of those estimates.

Views on transit

See Page 8 for what the Manhattan City Commission candidates think about implementing a transportation and inspectors could look at listed properties with multiple complaints.

Reitz said he does not support required inspections, though. Not only would some of the cost fall on a burdened city budget, Reitz said, but it forces inspection fees out of property owners who might not be part of the problem.

"Try to avoid coercion if you can," he said.

Mayor Karen McCulloh said she agreed about the need for a registration system, one that hopefully could be set up by January 2002.

"I think that's just a safety issue," she said. "Quite frankly, it will really help knowing where things are."

As for inspections, McCulloh said opposition probably will keep them from becoming mandatory until there is an overpowering need.

"I really don't think we're going to have anything until there's a disaster," she said.

Commissioner Brad Everett said he didn't oppose registration of rentals down to one occupant either. Most apartments are in good standing with code anyway. he said, and many apartments probably haven't been left out.

Inspection, however, would duplicate services that already exist for students and citizens, while adding to city costs.

"I don't want to see another four people hired over there," he said. One less costly solution might be a city-produced pamphlet of tenants' rights. Everett said, so they will use the services they already Candidate Mark Taussig said he supports registration as a basic safety issue, especially in a city where a significant portion of the population lives in rental housing.

Instead of a costly inspection system, Taussig said he would prefer an extension of mandatory fire inspections with a sticker of approval that lists the landlord's number and date of inspection.

Minimal code changes could force a landlord to raise a ceiling six inches, passing the costs on to the renter, he said.

"If we really care about safety, we've got to educate the tenants.' he said. "If we really care about affordable housing, we need to keep the costs down."

Candidate David Johnson also said he supports registration and following codes on the books.

"If you want to make sure properties are up to codes and ordinances, you have to know where they're at," he said.

In fact, Johnson said basement apartments that have serious safety risks probably are being left out right now. His problem with mandatory inspections, he said, is adding costs to government for a small problem.

"You have 10 percent of the property causing 90 percent of the problem," he said. "I don't think it's necessary to create a new level of bureaucracy to deal with a small number of properties."

Johnson said he would like to see more attention on landlord/tenant communication.

"I think there's a fix there, and you need to show some common sense," he said.

Candidates' views vary on transit issue

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

A potential Manhattan/K-State transit system is somewhere between being stalled and totalled, in the opinion of this year's Manhattan City Commission candidates.

In light of disappointing census results and an estimated price tag of $1.49 million, none of the five candidates running for three open seats think the plan's chances are

"It's a dead issue," Roger Reitz said. "It's too bad because I'd like to see a transportation system in Manhattan.

Although he supports the idea for the elderly and disabled, Reitz said this election's focus on cutting costs made the proposed two-route system tough enough to sell to voters. It was killed due to the fact Manhattan did not reach 50,000 residents, and not getting funding guaranteed at that size, he said.

"The concept is moot," he said. Under the transit system proposed in early January, a total of $500,000 in state and federal aid would be available for the system if Manhattan had more than 50,000 in the 2000 U.S. Census; instead, it came out as 44,828.

With the city unable to spend. Reitz said K-State might need to find solutions for its own needs.

"They have their own agenda and know what's best for them," he said.

Karen McCulloh agreed the census results hurt the transit proposal badly, but that the city should continue to watch what K-State does.

"The university is going to have to do something because of the parking," she said. "I definitely think the university is going to look at options, and the city needs to be poised to see if it can partner."

Not reaching 50,000 residents is a reason to step back and reevaluate the idea, she said, but the city can also watch communities like Lawrence that are putting in bus systems.

"Even if we'd gotten the 50,000, we wouldn't have moved this year,' she said.

Brad Everett, on the other hand said he would have been skeptical of the plan even if the city had reach 50,000.

With part of the student funds going back to maintain Bramlage parking lot and an ever-changing student body. Everett said the city might be left alone with the costs if a later student body voted to withdraw from the program.

"I think it's a dead issue," he said. At present, Everett said Manhatian does not have the extensive base to support the bus plan. K-State, he said. is on its own for now.

'I do think K-State has challenges with the parking up there," he said. "That's something. in and of themselves. They need to address it as a student body."

David Johnson said parking was a problem when he was a student at K-State.

"Years ago, we were all trying to push for a parking garage," he said. "I would think the thing would pay for itself in a couple of years."

Unfortunately, he said, a garage or a shuttle system is something K-State would need to look at on its own for now.

Johnson said he would have liked to explore a transit plan, but the lack of funds makes it must. Johnson said he would not oppose looking at the plan again in the future, though

"If it came up again, I'd take a look at it on a go-as-you-grow basis," he said.

Mark Taussig sald a city/K-State parking for might be one idea to consider 'It would be available 24 hours a day, which a bus system isn't," he said. "It makes sense to have dual parking." Taussig said he felt many transit supporters assumed others would

'I don't think there ever was any hope for a transit system because ( don't believe the students would have used it," he said. "I think it would be really nice to have a bus system, but I don't think we could afford it. Fiscally, I don't think it makes sense at this time."

All five candidates mentioned the need to augment existing public transportation like the senior citizen transportation system and the local taxi system.

Not all hope is gone for state and federal funding, though. Karen Davis, director of community development said Manhattan must be designated as an "urbanized area" in the census to receive federal and state funding. Though the city limits came in at about 44,000, Davis said surrounding communities could add to that number as census results continue to come in.

"There is still an opportunity to access funds from the feds and the state, but this takes some time," she

The definition of urbanized areas is running late. Davis said, but even if Manhattan were listed and approved by various agencies. the official register is scheduled to be published Spring 2002. Then the city would be required to set up a metropolitan planning organization to plan use of the funds, which would require about one year.

House votes for tax cut for married couples

By CURT ANDERSON

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Moving swiftly on another major piece of President Bush's tax package, the House voted overwheimingly Thursday for a bill cutting income taxes for millions of married couples and gradually doubling the $500-per-child tax credit.

The legislation, costing $399 billion over 10 years, passed on a 282-144 vote, with all Republicans who voted joining 64 Democrats in favor. It moves on to the Senare. where prospects are less assured for Republicans portrayed the bill as an issue of fairness for the millions of married two-earner couples who pay higher taxes than two single people and as a way of ensuring that projected budget surpluses won't be spent on bigger government.

"What we're talking about today is not the government's money. It's the people's money," said Rep. L.C. Watts, R-Okla.

Bush said Congress was well on the way to enacting real tax relief and repeated his insistence lawmakers pass his entire plan at its current size, not just a shortterm economic stimulus for 2001.

"I hope the Congress does not diminish the size of the package I sent up there or increase the size," be said.

Democrats tried to substitute a measure that would provide an immediate $300 rebate for individual income taxpayers and $600 for married couples at a cost of roughly $50 billion, but it was deleated on a 240-194 vote.

The bill debated Thursday. Democrats charged, is part of an overall Bush rax package that relies upon uncertain budget surplus.

projections, provides little tax relief in the early years, is far more costly than GOP predicts and is too tilted toward high-income taxpayers. But the House voted 231-196 against an alternative costing $585.5 billion over 10 years that would immediately create a new, lower 12 percent iax bracket for all taxpayers.

"If this tax out is locked into place, and the surplus is not there, then the funds won't be there" for priorities such as education, defense and Social Security, said Rep. Charles Rangel of New York, ranking Democrat on the House Ways and Means Committee.

Cory Dean, lead vocalist of Time Has Come, said his band performed because of the opportunities the concert presented.

"It is a fund raiser for a good cause," Dean said. "We were happy to come out here and perform in honor of the victims. Also, it let us reach out to people who wouldn't normally listen to us. Hopefully, we picked up a few new fans."

Other bands that performed were Anyone But Them, Trip Hop Children, Effigy, EgoManics, FlyBox and Ruskabank.

"We are really thankful to all the bands," said Angela Dikeman, concert organizer and junior in finance. "They all donated their time and came out and played for free. It was really great of

Besides the bands and Rusty's, Larry Heyka, father of Brad Heyka, said he was thankful to the three organizers.

"They are a great bunch of people with some really big hearts," Heyka said: "They are doing a lot for three people that they really didn't know that well." The only connection besides K-State that the concert planners had to the victims was through the campus greek system.

Heyka was a member of Kappa Epsilon, of which Westerman is president, and Befort was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, of which Powell is president. The surviving woman was a member of a

K-State sorority.

"When the three students first approached me with the idea, I was completely shocked." Heyka said. "I had no idea how big this was going to be and how much those three did for them and us."

Dikeman said she hopes the concert will help people remember the victims for what they brought to K-State and the community.

"We wanted the concert to be focused on the victims," she said. They touched a lot of people's lives, and we want to remember them in a positive light."

Heyka said the concert reflected the spirits of his son and the other victims

They were a great bunch of kids," he said. "They were fun. outgoing and they loved this community. They would have had a great time tonight."

Susie Thompson, customer support manager for CCCS, said the Manhattan branch offices see a lot of students looking to have help establish budgets and credit card repayment plans.

"Students are getting cards, but have never been taught about budgeting or what the fine print on these cards mean." Thompson said. "They get themselves in debt and need someone to help pull them out.

Thompson said that although $2,000 doesn't sound like a large credit card debt, it's devastating to many students. She said students who aren't working or working only part-time don't have the disposable income to pay off a debt that large.

"It doesn't sound like that much money, but there's much more to it than the $2,000," Thompson said. "There's interest and fees and so many other things we don't always think about. It's hard for students to come up with that kind of money. They get thrown into a tailspin."

CCCS has counselors available to look over different budgeting plans with students. The counselors help students decide what will work for them.

"We have plans that might work for some students," Thompson said. "We also suggest they do some research and look at others. Everyone has different needs."

Thompson said the most important thing for students is to have a system. She said all students should make payments before late fees are assessed and concentrate on using all disposable income to pay off debts.

"Students need to track their spending. Credit cards should be used for emergencies only," Thompson said. "It's up to individuals to decide whether pizza and CDs are emergencies. That's often the behavior that leads to huge debts."

Thompson said their counselors help students access their financial situation and develop strategies to reduce or pay off those debts.

"We can help students see where they are spending their money and where they can tighten down," Thompson said. "We may suggest they cut back in some areas or get a part-time job to pay off their debts."

Smith said students who have credit cards and are managing them OK need to remember they can't charge what they can't afford.

"You can't borrow from the future to consume now," Smith said. "That lack of discipline is the cause of these mountains of debt that are so nearly impossible to pay off."

PRIVILEGE FEE

While there are benefits and costs to everything, we want to provide benefits that do not overcharge students."

The reduction request was outlined in a final report delivered to the administration from the Privilege Fee Committee March 15, Walker said.

"There is more to college life than just classes," Walker said. "We want to provide the social component to allow students a gamete of experiences outside of the classroom. We also understand on the flip side that we have to keep costs as low as possible."

Worcester said student government performed effectively in the annual fee reviews by considering future issues to provide the right amount of allowance for each area.

"We constantly ask ourselves, 'Is this valuable to every student on campus?" Walker said. "We then evaluate each area to see if there is too much, too little or just the right amount spent in each division."

The reduction will balance out a $6 increase from last year. Walker said he credits the previous increase to inflation and higher general operating costs.

"With the $6 decrease per student per semester, we are where we were prior to this semester, with total costs at $251," Worcester said. "It is a little more money in the students' pockets to spend elsewhere.

Dana Pracht, former student body vice president, said that with no cuts in funding and the ability to maintain a steady balance, the conclusion was rather obvious.

"We are very excited and hope students will benefit," Pracht said. "We want to provide the best rate possible for students. No one ever complains at a reduction."

Mo.'s Arrowhead Stadium, and Bob Dylan, who will perform in late April at the Topeka Expocenter. "It's blown away N'Sync, and sales for the N'Sync tickets weren't anything compared to this. I think it's one of the biggest concerts we've had." Houston said. "It's blown away Bob Dylan, too."

Muller said that normally, to bring a performer or group to Bramlage, he must request booking a performance date through the performer's promoter. This concert, however, is different because Muller was approached by the promoter instead.

"We look at certain acts on the road, and we'll speak to promoters about bringing those acts here." he said. "One of the promoters thought this show was very suitable for our market, so they contacted us. "At the time, Destiny's Child was an up-and-coming group, but within the last six months, they've really exploded onto the scene, and we're very fortunate to have such a talented group." Since this is the last stop of the group's headliner tour, MTV will beon hand to broadcast from the concert.

Dancers will be moving to the beat of a different drum this weekend at K-State's SpringDance 2001.

Percussion professor Kurt Gartner and Elizabeth Moran. director of dance, have collaborated to create the concert's final routine, "Wake Up!"

Gartner said Moran came to him with a piece of prerecorded music she wanted to use in the show. After hours of cooperation, he said he composed and created a final product that included a threeplayer drum ensemble.

"We tried to learn each other's language," he said. "I would play music for her, and then she would dance for me."

The piece is a combination of the original prerecorded material, his prerecorded additions and also live drum improvisation onstage during the dancers' final routine, be said. Along with two K-State students, he will perform the selection with a variety of instruments, including hand drums, hardware metals and electronic drums.

"It's like moving from the Industrial Revolution to the Information Age, which is basically how the music takes direction, too," he said.

Moran said collaborating with a completely different discipline was the most unique aspect of this year's concert.

"It's invigorating because it will never be the same performance," Moran said.

Jessica Brown, junior in elementary education and dance, is the only student choreographer featured in SpringDance. She said this is her lifth dance concert at K-State, and the live percussion has greatly changed this year's show.

"When you have them actually playing it for you, it gives rehearsal that much more energy," Brown said. The show also is different because the curtain is going up much later this year. "I have never had to come back after spring break and go right into a performance." Brown said, "I had a rough break. I broke my toe, but I am still dancing." Moran said that along with this week's challenges of technical workers and the dancers working together, coming back from spring break has been an added

K-State begins to implement wireless technology

Service enables Internet use to grow in campus buildings.

By NICK BRATKOVIC Kansas State Collegian

Wireless laptop technology is becoming a reality on campus.

K-State Computing and Network Services is installing wireless communications in various spots on campus.

Harvard Townsend, director of CNS. said it is a pilot program going on that is placing technology in select locations. Any K-State student with the necessary equipment can be a part of the program. he said.

Richard Becker, CNS network manager, said the program has been done in areas that have requested the service,

"So far we have deployed it based on areas of need and areas that want this type of technology," he said.

The technology, Townsend said, is available in the Union Food Court, Nichols Hall and other areas such as the center on the first floor of Rathbone Hall, which Includes Paslay Lecture Hall, as well as areas in Fairchild Hall and classrooms in

Townsend said CNS began looking into the prospects of wireless technology more than a year ago after the 802.11b standard made it possible to provide adequate performance for normal use, like Web browsing and e-mail at a reasonable price. Becker said it is in the high hundred dollar

The air port cards give users the choice of different types of cards to use. Townsend said future plans are in the works for Hale Library and other areas. The library plan would have not been possible without the support from Student Senate and privilege fees that helped pay for phase II of the Infocommons project.

Next year, we plan to cover most of Hale Library for wireless support. New notebook computers equipped with wireless PC cards will be available for library patrons to check out and use in the library," he said. "You'll be able to wander most anywhere in the public areas of Hale and be connected to the Internet through

The computers are hooked up through access points, and Townsend said up to 20 computers can be used for routine Internet access like searching the Web or checking e-mail on a given point.

The equipment is made up of a 802.11b wireless PC card for a notebook computer.

We are using wireless technology by Cisco Systems Inc., so we recommend people use Cisco Aironet 802.11b PC cards with their notebook computers, Townsend said. "However, cards by other manufacturers such as Lucent (now called Avaya) will work fine."

Townsend said the cards can be purchased from the Union Computer Store, and they are available for a variety of different types of computers. It is a system, Becker said, designed to provide mobility to computer members.

"I don't think wireless was intended to replace wired connections," Becker said. "It is more of an add-on for its users and gives them added mobility."

Townsend said the services are a convenience for classrooms.

"It's particularly nice for classrooms and auditoriums that are difficult or expensive to wire," Townsend said.

Notre Dame beats Purdue in title game

By CHUCK SCHOFFNER The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS - Notre Dame pulled off yet another comeback, this one for the biggest prize of all.

The Irish clawed and scratched their way back from deficits time after time and beat Purdue 68-66 on Ruth Riley's two free throws with 5.8 seconds left to win their first national championship.

Notre Dame trailed by 12 points in the first half and was down 66-64 with a little more than a minute to play when Riley, the team's unanimous All-American and national player of the year, came through

First, she scored in the lane to tie the game at 66 with 1:01 remaining. Then, she rebounded a miss by Purdue's Shereka Wright, enabling the Irish to set up a late shot.

They got the ball to Riley, and she was fouled by Wright. She made the first free throw, returned to the line after a Purdue timeous and calmly made the second.

"This is the only thing I wanted." Riley said. "To be able to share this with my teammates is unbelievable. ... We worked so hard that it was fitting to end the season this way

Milosevic not surrendering

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The White House monitored efforts Saturday by Yugoslav authorities to arrest former President Slobodan Milosevic.

Congress had set a midnight Saturday deadline for the Bush administration to certify that Yugoslavia was cooperating with the U.N. war crimes tribunal, which indicted Milosevic in 1999 and wants to put him on trial in the Netherlands.

Secretary of State Colin Powell planned to make an announcement today. At stake is $50 million in U.S. assistance that has not yet been disbursed. Congress has set aside $100 million for Belgrade for the current fiscal year.

An intimidating hill on the first part of the 2.1-mile trail through the Konza Prairie Biological Station didn't stop them either.

"The hill and I are not friends," Kathy Denney, Van Zile Hall residence life coordinator, said. "It was worth the climb, though. The view is amazing up there.

Students battled the wind and the hill in an effort to raise money for the Mid-Kansas Free Mammography Program, which works to further breast cancer research.

"Breast cancer is one of the things that affects so many people," said AJ Bradley, sophomore in radio and television. "Yet, it's not given that much attention.

We're trying to increase awareness." Bradley was part of the group that organized the event. Having known many people with breast cancer, Bradley said she wanted to help aid the research efforts.

"I've had a lot of family members that have had breast cancer and died from it," she said. "I've seen how it affects everyone - these women and their families that love them."

Organizers said they chose the Konza Prairie as the location for the event because of its beauty and importance to K-State.

"Konza surrounds us," Bradley said. "We're literally in the middle of this beautiful prairie, yet most people totally ignore it. We're trying to bring attention to it."

Roars and cheers erupted in Bramlage Coliseum as fog flooded the stage. The trio that makes up Destiny's Child - Kelly, Michelle and Beyoncé sauntered onstage to deafening applause, the star attraction of this much-anticipated concert Saturday night.

The Grammy Award-winning R&B group took the stage an hour into the concert after the opening acts of True Vibe, PYT and Stacie Orrico had performed. Destiny's Child captivated the audience with their upbeat songs, including "Say My Name," "Jumpin,' Jumpin,'" "Bills, Bills, Bills" and "Independent Women, Part I," from the "Charlie's Angels" movie soundtrack.

Between the performances, while the trio were changing clothes backstage, the audience was entertained by the group's backup dancers in dance performances accompanied by popular R&B music. As the trio sang their fast-paced, soulful songs,

"I'm looking forward to it," Cornelius Washington, sophomore in architecture, said before the concert. "I got tickets as soon as I could."

Indiana teen-ager faces charges in fatal shooting

GARY, Ind. - A teen-ager accused of fatally shooting a student outside a high school was scheduled to be formally charged with murder on Monday.

Investigators said Donald Ray Burt In, 17, a former student at Lew Wallace High School, admitted shooting sophomore Neal Boyd. 16.

Burt's half-brother, Sidney Abrons, 21, told the Post-Tribune of Gary that Burt was expelled from the school nearly two years ago for imancy and a history of lighting.

"He was just like everyone else: If you picked at him and tried to light, he'd light," Abrons said.

Abrons said Burt had been attending another school to earn his general education diploma and hoped to become a mechanic. Police Chief John Roby said Burt didn't give a motive for the killing. Detective Keith Richardson told

The Times of Northwest Indiana that Burt "wanted to tell us the situation, but his parents advised him not to say anything."

Donald Ray Burr Sr. said his son did not kill Boyd, describing the teen-agers as best friends. Burt shot at people who were about to assault him and Boyd, the lather said.

Women's program receives grant U.S.-China relations

Kansas State Collegian

A program that encourages women to pursue their interest in science and math was created by four K-State women two years ago.

The women applied for funding and MORE INFO? proposed a program that would allow college women and middle-school girls to meet role models in the fields of engineering and science.

Ruth Dyer, assistant to the provost; Beth Montelone, associate professor of biology; Jackie Spears, director of Women's Studies; and Dolores Takemoto, professor of biochemistry, received a $30,000 grant from the National Science Foundation and created Girls Reaching Our World.

Since the birth of the idea, the organization has done just what the name suggests. It has blossomed into a program that reached 100 girls last summer at a workshop on

Suzanne Franks, director of K-State's Women in Engineering and Science Program, said she came to K-State in 1999, after the first grant had been received. Franks worked with the group to create a workshop to make middle-school girls aware that girls their age and college women are interested in attending this

"We wanted to encourage the girls to stick with math and science throughout high school, so that careers in sciences and engineering are available to them," Franks said. "Middle school is a critical > time in the life of a young girl - a time when they start feeling peer pressure to not do well in math and science. If they don't stick with math and science. then careers are closed to them."

Montelone said studies have shown college women also, are at a point where they are likely to change majors, if they are not encouraged.

"I think the K-State students who were escorts at the workshop felt empowered," Montelone said. "They gained confidence in their own career choices by interacting with the young girls."

After the success of the 2000 workshop, the group applied for a second, larger grant to expand on its original ideas. If funding is granted, the project will incorporate new extensions of the initial goal.

Part of the plan includes the incorporation of middle school teachers. There are plans to offer a Gender Equitable Teaching Methods class at K-State that would be geared towards science and math teachers. The teachers will be paired with K-State faculty during the workshop.

"Teachers get the benefit of spending time with K-State faculty to get to know more about what scientists and engineers do in daily work to take back to the classroom and share them with their students," Franks said. "It is an essential part of the program because, even unintentionally, teachers can do things that can discourage girls from participating in math- and science-related activities."

Another part of the program would allow education of middle-school girls to carry on throughout the school year. Visits to companies in Kansas City, Manhattan and surrounding areas would be offered to workshop attendees.

Girls will meet with scientists and engineers, who will discuss their jobs and what their companies do and how they address environmental needs in their work.

"It is not just a one-time event, but we offer things for the girls to participate in throughout the year," Franks said. "To get them involved, to sustain their interest and excitement throughout the year is a primary goal."

Franks said her commitment to this project goes beyond the requirements of the job.

"This is something that is critically important to the future economic health of our nation as a whole," Franks said. "If we do not encourage young girls to participate in science and engineering, we cannot maintain our current technical edge."

BEIJING - A U.S. Navy surveillance plane collided with a Chinese fighter jet sent to intercept it over the South China Sea on Sunday and made an emergency landing in China. The Chinese government said the fighter crashed and its pilot was China quickly blamed the U.S. aircraft for the collision off the southern Chinese island of Hainan. But the commander of U.S. Pacific military forces said the slower U.S. plane was more likely to have been hit by the nimble Chinese fighter.

"It's pretty obvious who bumped who," said Adm. Dennis Blair in

The incident comes at an uneasy time in U.S.-Chinese relations. The Bush administration has taken a warier attitude toward Beijing, and the president reportedly is leaning towards selling Taiwan much of the high-tech weapons it seeks - a sale bitterly opposed by China.

The American EP-3 plane landed at a military airfield on Hainan. None of the 24 crew members were injured. said Col. John Bratton, a spokesman for the U.S. Pacific Command in Hawaii. The status of the crew and control of the plane on the ground were unclear.

Chinese officials assured the United States the crew is safe, and American diplomats were going to Hainan to see them, U.S. Ambassador Joseph Prueher said. He said he had talked with Secretary of State Colin Powell. President Bush was briefed on the episode Sunday morning, an administration official said.

The U.S. plane was on a routine surveillance flight in international airspace when two Chinese fighters intercepted it. Bratton said. In Honolulu, U.S. Pacific Command officials showed a map that put the collision about 80 miles southeast of Hainan, well outside the 12-mile territorial sea and airspace.

It is the ultimate act of charity; to give blood to those who need it most. Students and faculty should make every effort they can to give blood at this event.

In an interview with the Collegian last week, Nancy Powell, American Red Cross representative and donor resource consultant for the blood drive, said there is one main reason for tack of participation. Powell said the reason is because potential donors are not personally asked.

I could kill Monica Lewinsky. Even though her 15 minutes are up. I'm still mad as all hell. While I couldn't give a damn about her personal life and refuse to devote any more ink to her sexual exploits, I can't forgive her for giving interns in this country a bad rep.

That, to me, is unforgivable. With summer soon upon us, many K-State students are getting ready to pack are about to become clogged with kids trying to figure out the collating function documents that require proofreading. surviving only on Pop Tarts and take-out food, fueled by Diet Coke and ginseng.

off to internships across the nation. Offices on the copy machine and the slow drip on the coffee maker. It will be a veritable army of workers in their early 20s crouched over

Many businesses have come to rely on a steady flow of interns to do menial tasks and free salaried employees for more substantive tasks. It's certainly a worthy idea, as inexperienced, but, hopeful students can learn their trade best by being in the trenches, and businesses only can benefit from free or cheap help.

If you go below the surface of this system, however, you might discover it's far more complicated. You might discover that, in fact, 80 percent of the world's art is created by interns.

This figure is not official. Heck, it's not even credible. It is, however, the estimate of someone who's been a working cog in the machine

As a former (and probably a future) office whipping boy. I can assure you, dear reader, that the people who do the work in this world and the people who get the credit often are two completely different demographics. It's one of the great injustices resulting from the industrial revolution. It might not be fair, but it's definitely

The battle over intellectual property rights might seem like a catch-all fever right now, but it's nothing compared to what would happen if the countless interns who make daily contributions, not just of labor, but of creativity, were to demand credit for their work. The key to keeping them quiet is the rarely realized possibility of upward mobility.

From the glittering Hollywood studios of the film industry to the stately steps of 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., overworked, underappreciated 20-somethings are actually running this country (which also means they're running the planet; that's just how imperialism works). And they're doing it in hopes that their grueling efforts eventually will be rewarded with highpaying careers of their own.

Should you be entering an internship this summer, I submit the following advice: The key is to prey on the weaknesses of your superiors. After cleaning up their messes and covering for their mistakes long enough, you'll have the necessary goods to get what you want. No matter how much of your own blood, sweat and tears you offer them, you're not really valued until you're seen as dangerous.

No one is interested in the integrity of interns. The integrity of art is important. The integrity of the law is a biggie. The company you work for most likely is interested in maintaining its integrity. But when push comes to shove, deadlines have to be met, which means work has to be done. Which means the interns have to perform miracles while the bosses take a long lunch. And if the interns in question are totally void of scruples, so be it.

Given this moral infrastructure, it is up to you to take advantage of them when they're not looking.

Sure, you should prove that you are capable of doing good work, but in any industry that hires interns, a good work ethic is not enough. Don't let them know you're smarter than they are until the moment is right. Then pounce and destroy and take over the throne. And once you've done this, be really, really nice to the interns who work for you.

Lewinsky took the easy route and made the term "intern" a national joke. But interns who are worth their salt will know that their hard work deserves a reward, and they'll go after it. Watch your back.

Television provides escape from real world last week, I was next door visiting my neighbors. It was a warm and breezy, almost-spring day, and with the door open and the television on. We we sat in the living mom mostly were talking, laughing and not so much watching the television. However, when we stumbled across a full in the conversation, we focused our attention on the TV screen: ESPN was on. and a sports reporter was highlighting the remaining teams in the NCAA basketball tournament. Duke and Maryland were the headline teams of this "news" segment. and the announcer was discussing Maryland's practice plans for the rest of the week, in preparation for the game against Duke.

"Today at practice," she was saying, "Maryland will be watching its own game film, trying to learn from its past performances. And tomorrow, it will begin watching Duke's game film in order to prepare for the upcoming matchup."

And that was about all I caught of ESPN's update, as once again my conversation with my neighbor resumed

Several minutes later, I removed myself from the couch and headed home with the intention of doing homework. But as I was walking across the corner, in the direction of my apartment, my thoughts began to change from the poetry assignment waiting dejectedly in my book bag to the basketball segment I had just seen on television.

In an unforeseen rush, I started thinking again about what the sportscaster had said. "Hmmmm..." I thought, "So today Maryland is watching its own game film. I wonder if it will be watching games from this season only? Or maybe from this tournament only. I wonder if it will be watching any of its former games with Duke today, or if it will save those all for tomorrow. Or I wonder if when it watches Duke's games tomorrow, if it will even watch its own previous matchups with Duke, or only Duke's previous matchups with other teams? Or, I wonder ..

In the short walk from next door to my home, my mind had began racing in one urgent direction. I began walking even faster, just so I could flip on the television and hopefully catch some more Final Four news information. And just as I clumsily unlocked the door, and stepped into my darkened apartment. I suddenly thought to myself, "WHOA! Hold on a minute - why do I even care?"

Now, don't get me wrong, it's not that I think the NCAA tournament isn't important. I know it is extremely important to many people. However, in my life, at this point in the proverbial game, its significance was dim. In all honesty, I wouldn't have even known which teams were remaining in tournament play, if my roommate's boyfriend wasn't glued to my living room couch, remote in hand.

Yet, here I was wasting my time, pondering Maryland's practice schedule. What was wrong with this picture?

Show me the importance. Show me the relevance. Tell me why it is that for a moment I found it necessary to put my homework and other obligations aside to sit down and watch information about basketball teams that, well, quite frankly, I couldn't care less about.

It seems crazy and unimportant in retrospect, but at the time, it was a compelling realization.

At times, the greatest escape from real life is television. Through television, it is considerably simple to lose ourselves and our personal concerns in exchange for the highly publicized lives of others.

We all have our own media-provided escapes. That is why, as a whole, we spend so much time pondering, or even disputing things like Britney Spears' alleged virginity or Robert Downey Ir.'s drug addiction. Or why I actually have found myself listening intently to conversations about "Friends'" Monica and Chandler's wedding plans. We don't know these people (some of them don't even exist), so, in all practicality, it shouldn't matter.

But, for some reason, it does. It does matter, even if for the sole reason of temporarily not thinking about our own

Ultimately, I flopped down in the recliner and turned on ESPN for another half hour. I watched continued coverage on Duke and Maryland, even though I knew that I never would watch the actual game. But that is what I wanted to think about at that moment, so I did.

The fact of the matter is, at that specific time, I wasn't eager to deal with

I hadn't found the energy to do my homework quite yet, or the inspiration to do anything else of honest importance (such as wash the dishes). And when the game coverage was over, I was reenergized and revived. I had escaped momentarily into the depths of an unlikely, irrelevant world, and now I could begin to deal with my own world.

So when you get home tonight, watch some television. Who cares what people say. Television isn't always bad for you.

Vouchers take much-needed money from public schools

I'd like to clear up a few of the most common misconceptions about the school vouchers program that keeps popping up in the news.

Many people hear about it and think, "Great I'll be able to send my kids to that nice private school now." Wrong.

Vouchers will have the face value of the cost of one child's education at the rate the government is funding per student in public schools. For ease of discussion, let's pretend $1,000 is this cost. So each student in the United States would be given one of these vouchers to use where their parents see fit. If you choose to go to a private school, your child's voucher will count toward the first

$1,000 of his or her tuition. If tuition at the private school is $5,000 a year, you, as the parent, still have to pay $4,000 for your child to go to that private school, whereas at the public schools you would have to pay only a small fee for books on top of your voucher.

Beyond that, private schools do not have to accept any student they choose not to for any reason they see fit. So they will not have to accept your child into their school simply because you have a

If your child is, for instance, disabled, and the private school is not accessible for them, they have the right to turn your child away because they cannot meet his or her needs.

A public school will take any necessary steps to accommodate the disabled child. Public schools are legally obligated to do

Private schools also have limited capacity, so they will continue to do as they have always done, and select their students on whatever merits they choose. This means your student might not be chosen to attend a given private school, regardless of having a voucher.

The most important point is that vouchers will take millions of dollars away from public schools. People continually complain that public schools are inferior to private schools.

The fact is, as it stands now, private schools have budgets per student that are double to triple the budget public schools have to work with. This enables private schools to have more options as to what they will build, what programs they can fund, and what activities they will provide their students.

If each child, including those attending private schools, brings his or her share of government education funds with them, public schools will have even less money to use to provide for their students.

This only will lead to a much wider disparity from public to private schools and the quality of education they are able to provide. Public schools have no other source of funding and thus will be unable to turn this process around once it is

If you don't think this concerns you. you are wrong. As public schools get more run down, and are unable to afford supplies, unable to keep up their facilities, unable to fund athletics and unable to pay teacher's salaries; more people will be trying to get their children into the limited space the private schools will have avail-

Your child might be the one left out, forced to attend public schools that will be worse than ever, all due to the downward spiral started by the loss of government funds.

The United States is prosperous because we provide a decent education to all members of our society. How long can this last if our children have no place to

Students act up for Easter

By JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

Two K-State students are getting a lesson in psychology outside the classroom.

Stacee Hastings, senior in gerontology, and Shamecha Simms, freshmen in open-option, work as the Easter Bunny at Manhattan Town Center.

"It really is an interesting job."
Simms said. "Whether you are in the bunny suit or taking the pictures, you learn a lot about parenting and children. It is interesting to see how they interact with each other — kind of like a lesson in psychology."

Both Hastings and Simms worked as photographers with Santa Claus for Reflections Photography during the Christmas season; however, they both said they enjoy the Easter season more.

"This is neat because we actually get to be the bunny, not just take the pictures." Hastings said. "It is fun to see the kids' reaction to what you do while you have the costume on."

Unlike Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny does not talk to the children. Instead, Hastings said, he speaks with gestures.

"We can dance around, wave at people and blow kisses," she said. "The little kids love it."

However, not being able to talk also puts the women in awkward situations, Simms said.

"Yesterday a girl came up and said, 'I love you so much, and I have been waiting for you all year long,'" she said of her friend's experience. "It was so funny because Stacee couldn't say anything back because she was the bunny. She couldn't even shake ber head because the head of the costume is so heavy."

Simms said another hard part of their job is dealing with children who are scared of the bunny.

"It takes a little experience to learn the best way to handle the simution," she said. "The trick is to let the kids make up their own mind — not to force them up there because that scares them more."

Debra Niemeyer, Manhattau resident, said her oldest daughter was scared to go to the bunny until she was 4 years old.

"We couldn't even get her past the green carpet where the camera sets." Niemeyer said. "But we have been bringing all three of them back each year, and hopefully, they will gradually all get used to the bunny."

Niemeyer and her husband, Rob, brought their children, lessica, 6: Luke, 3; and Kaydin, 1; to see the bunny this year at the mall.

This year, Jessica and Luke approached the bunny, but Kaydin was scared.

"He was nice." Luke said. "He blew kisses to Kaydin," lessica echood her younger brother's impressions.

"It was fun," she said, "He waved at us and gave us a hug."

Hastings said the best part of her job is seeing the children's expressions toward the Easter

"They are so excited." she said.
"They give us hugs and high fives.
The majority of them are so happy to get to sit on our laps or say 'Hi' to us. It is a great job."

Christian program provides outlets for devotion, worship

■ Ichthus sponsors many weekly activities students can become involved in.

By ERICA COURTRIGHT Kansas State Collegian

Early followers of Jesus Christ identified each other by a symbol called an ichthus. Nearly 2,000 years later, a group of K-State students continue to find Christian fellowship in a group by the same name.

Thousands of years ago, during a time when Christians were persecuted and fed to lions because of their religious beliefs, they used the ichthus, the simple fish design often associated with Christianity, to safely identify each other.

If a Christian was talking to a person they thought might share their faith, they would lean down and draw part of an ichthus in the dirt. A Christian person would recognize the gesture and finish the drawing.

More than 100 students will join fellow Christians today in the campus organization named for that Christian symbol.

Brett Osborn, junior in human resource management, said Ichthus provides Christian fellowship and functions like a church for K-State students.

"It's all based on relationships," he said. "It's a relational-based ministry where people bring in people they know and that kind of thing.

Donna Rimbo, junior in speech communication, said she thinks it's important for Christians to become part of a community like Ichthus.

"No matter where you are, if you're a believer, you need to be plugged in," she said. "Ours isn't an individualistic faith."

lchthus sponsors a variety of weekly activities to develop that sense of community. On Thursday nights, lchthus has outreach meetings. These meetings include skits, music and personal testimonies of faith. Osborn said this is a time Ichthus members often invite friends and people interested in getting involved.

The organization also has Bible study groups for men and women that meet at different times during the week, and members also go to Ecclesia, a Sunday evening worship time.

The group also sponsors Alpha, a time Monday evenings for people who are seeking answers to questions about Christianity, and Koinonia, a once-a-week fellowship time for freshman.

There also is a group of committed members of Ichthus called Doulos that meets on a monthly basis to pray for the organization and discuss pressing issues.

Rimbo compared the Doulos meetings to a church's potluck dinners.

Rimbo said all of these activities sponsored by Ichthus have a MORE INFO?

She said she still can remember her first experience with Ichthus during the fall semester of her freshman year, when she went to a Thursday evening meeting with her roommate.

She said she hoped her experiences would encourage other K-State students to get involved with Ichthus.

Instrument landing in Aspen crash questioned

By JUDITH KOHLER

The Associated Press

ASPEN. Colo. — Air traffic controllers at Aspen's airport apparently did not receive a warning against nighttime instrument landings before a chartered plane slammed into a hillside short of the runway, killing all 18 aboard, federal investigators said Sunday.

Crews began removing the wreckage of the twin-engine Gulfstream III from the crash site a few hundreds yards from the runway. It was to be taken to a hangar at Greeley, Colo., for further study, officials said.

Investigators still have not determined the cause of the crash. Thursday night, which killed all 15 passengers and three crew members. The pilot had received permission from the tower to make an instrument landing, officials

Two days before the crash, the Federal Aviation Administration had issued a notice that planes should not be allowed to make instrument landings at the Aspen airport at night.

The pilot had receive the warning when the plane, which departed from Burbank, Calif., and stopped in Los Angeles, said Carol Carmody, the National Transportation Safety Board's acting chairwoman. But she said at a news conference Sunday that the warning was not written clearly and that the pilot might not have understood it.

Duke went through this city to win its last national championship. In 1992, the Blue Devils became the first team to repeat since the UCIA dynasty of the 1970s with a 20-point win over Michigan.

Duke's Mike Krzyzewski has a chance to join his college coach. Bob Knight, in third place on the career list with three titles. John Wooden won 10 at UCIA and Adolph Rupp won four at Kentucky.

"It's a different team each time, different kids," said Krzyzewski, entering his seventh national championship game. "The fact that I've been here, or I'm sure Lute would say the same thing, you kind of live the season through the kids on your team, which is what makes it exciting."

Woodlee places 2nd in 3-point shooting event

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's all-time three-point shooter Kim Woodlee finished second in Saturday's nationally televised State Farm Women's Basketball Three-Point Shooting Contest on ESPN.

Woodlee, whose 285 career treys in her four-year stint as a Wildcat are the second most in Big 12 history. shot 65.3 percent (49 of 75) in the contest and finished second to Fairfield's Holly Tapley, who beat Woodlee in the finals by hitting 15 treys to Woodlee's 14 in the final.

Woodlee sank 16 threepointers in the first round, a round-high 19 in the semifinals, including 9 of 10 from one wing to the top of the arc, and 14 in

Wins come down to tie-breakers

K-State's tennis team made a living out of coming through when it had to this weekend in earning two wins against Hig 12 foes Colorado and Nebraska.

Paced by five tie-breaker wins in Saturday's matchup against the Buffaloes (7-8, 2-3), K-State earned a 6-1 win over Colorado after trailing in all but two singles marches on the day.

I'm extremely happy with how we played in those situations," head coach Steve Bierau said. "Those were critical points in those matches, and when it really counted, they played well, and played awfully

"I think (Colorado) was a key moment for us. To did it, and at the time they did it, and how it affected that match is something that can really have an impact on our season. I'm happy to see that they play well when it's tough."

The win was the Wildcais' seemed straight over the Buffaloes, and just the second K-State win in nine tries against Colorado in Manhattan.

Kathy Chuda, the Cats' No. 4 singles player, ranher win streak to seven straight after a 7-6 (3), 6-1

UP NEXT The Cats kick off a four-match road trip next weekend when they travel to Columbia, Mo., Saturday for a matchup against conference opponent Missouri (12-5, 2-5) at 1

Colorado freshman Morgan Sall. Drailing 6-5 in the first set, Chuda rallied back to force the tie-breaker, and Sall couldn't find an answer to Chuda's five-straight points in the extra frame. "I was getting frustrated in the first set, when I was four or five down, but then I got back into the match," Chuda said. "I changed my tactics and stopped making stupid unforced errors and kept the ball in play.

"I said. I can't let her win.' I was just not going to

That mentality seemed to be contagious for the K-State's No. 1-4 players all trailed in the first set of their respective matches, but came back to force the breakers and win in every case. Eva Novotna, at No. 3. struggled early against the Buffs' Lia Domingo, but managed to win the lie breaker, and then the match 7-6 (4), 6-3.

"Il definitely gives you more confidence to win the tie breaker," she said. "Then you have to keep focused and do the same things in the second set. Sometimes you can lose your concentration, and the other person can take advantage of that."

Concentration and focus seemed to be the theme for the Cats all day, taking all but two matches from Colorado on the eve of their showdown with No. 39 Nebraska (14-2, 2-2).

Play moved from Abeam Field House on Saturday to the Washburn Tennis Facility on Sunday for the Cats' match with the Huskers, and K-State's momentum from Saturday made the trip as well.

Though Sunday's matchup featured just two tiebreakers. K-State still managed to split singles play and take two of three doubles contests to push its record to 8-6 overall, and 4-1 in Big 12 play.

ay's unset win over Nebraska was K-State third in four matchups against the Huskers, and the second over a ranked team this season. The Cats' No. 74 ranking in the latest ITA rankings should rise thanks to a solid weekend of tennis that Bietau said was nice to see out of his team.

"All of the matches that we have right now are important," Bietau said, "It makes it a very complete, successful weekend for us to get a couple of wins against two Big 12 learns."

Sophomores Rebekah Green and Austra Skujyte each posted NCAA-provisional qualifying marks in the shot put, and three other Cats earned season-bests to lead K-State at the Florida Relays Saturday in Gainesville.

Green finished second in the women's invitational with a throw of 51-7, and Skulyte placed tourth with a mark of 50-8. Green also placed ninth in the discus with a mark of 141-2, and Skuppe finished fifth in the invitational long jump with a leap of 19-2.50

Also in the field events, junior Leslie Mikos linished second in the hammer throw on Friday with a personalbest mark of 177-0, more than eight feet farther than her previous best of 168-7

"Leslie probably had the best performance of the day," assistant coach Michael Smith said. "For her to open up a personal record of almost eight feet this early in the season is a great mark."

The mark was set in spire of a thunderstorm that pelted the meet throughout the day Friday. The wind and rain were most severe during the women's javelin throw, but two Cats still earned season-best marks. Sophomore

Mandi Peterson placed second with a toss of 150-5, and Skulyte earned third with a mark of 148-7

In the women's triple jump, junior Teena Clincy placed third with a mark of 37-6.75. Freshman Clinton Jamison was fourth in the men's long jump with a leap of 22-7.25, and freshman Morgan High was lifth in the women's high jump with a mark of 5-8. Senior Terresha DeRossett was sixth in the high jump with a mark of 5-8. Freshman Queeneih Evurunobi was sexth in the long jump with a leap of 18-10.75. Freshman Tarl Vetter was eighth in the javelin with a mark of 174-9.

On the track, the men's 4x100-meter relay team of Jason Green, Dustin McDonald. Patrick Pyle and Jamison won the men's university section with a time of 41.53. The 4x200-meter relay team of Roberto Carvajal, Green, Cedric El-Idrissi and Thesiaus Robinson finished second with a time of 1:27.48.

Individually, freshman Joseph Lee ran a season-best 1:49.98 in the 800 meters to place third.

The women's 4x100-meter relay team ran a time of 47.11 to finish fourth, and the 4x200-meter relay team of Ragean Hill, Evurimobi, Chika Onyebuchi and Clincy placed fifth with a finish of 1:38.77.

K-State swept by Baylor in 3-game weekend series

K-State found out firsthand why Baylor sits atop the Big 12 baseball standings, as the Bears. swept the weekend series at Waco, Texas.

In the first game of the series Friday, Baylor tooked every bit like the 14th-ranked team in the country, as the Bears easily defeated K-State 14-0 in a run-rule game.

"Obviously, I am very disappointed with the effort both offensively and defensively," head coach Mike Clark said. "The game was very close for the first four innings, then we give up back-to-back six-run innings and end up getting heat 14-0.

Unless these players he kicked off were peddling dope or something, I don't know why he'd kick them off so quickly. Texas Tech now only has four scholarship players

I don't think Knight will have the easiest time recruiting players, either. How can he sell Texas Tech to top high school recruits? Maybe by telling them he's now made all practices closed, removed the names from the back of Tech's jerseys and has a required haircut for his players. Association. To Smyth, it also was a day of fun, but to her mother, it was a way to get her daughter involved in helping a cause that is important to the family. Manhattan's first all-city Jump Rope for Heart brought 75 students from Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex on Saturday.

The students raised about $3,000 to help fund education and research for heart disease and strokes. The American Heart Association donates about $300,000 annually to K-State research through grants.

"It is a nice tie-in that some of the money raised by the American Heart Association through events like this one comes back to Manhattan," said Lance Wilson, American Heart Association North Central Kansas regional director. "The kids who came and the money they raised has really exceeded what we thought."

The K-State Department of Human Nutrilion helped with the event. Kathy Grunewald, professor of human nutrition, said she became involved because she saw the program as a way to involve K-State students in the education of younger children.

"It is a great idea because it allows children to be physically active and have (un at the same time and win prizes." Grunewald said. "The students in my department were all very interested in participating.

Student volunteers majoring in nutrition, dietetics and kinesiology arrived early to help set up. They then stayed and held ropes for the children, collected money and handed out prizes

'I think it is a first-time opportunity for a lot of grade school children." Nicole Kiernan, senior in dietetics, said. "It is good for them to start thinking about earning money for a good cause and about being healthy.

Jerry Carpenter, physical education teacher at Lee and Roosevelt schools, led the participants in about two hours of jumproping activities.

"It is an enormous concern that all P.E. reachers have that the fitness level of kids is declining." Carpenter said. "Kids have such a sedentary lifestyle. They are more apt to play Nintendo or sit at a computer after school than they are to go outside and play. This is an opportunity to teach them ways to be involved in physical activity."

The American Heart Association sponsors Jump Rope for Heart activities across the state. Wilson said.

"This year, we were working. toward setting a foundation for the event, so that in future years we will be able to expand and make it an annual event." he said. "We want to expand to make this an educational experience by having informational booths for the Participants such as Hynes kept close to the trail and were reminded that the Konza is not only a recreational area, but a research area.

"The wind wasn't as much of an obstacle as the terrain," Hynes said. "Once I was over that first hill, I hit cruise control for the rest of the way.

After the run/walk, students car pooled to Safari Jack's, where half of all proceeds of the event were given to the charity.

"That was a good, solid race for them," head coach Jenny Hale said. "They had a very good rhythm that race.

We have been struggling a little with that crew getting frustrated. They lost to Tulsa in Texas, and it was a nice win for them today.

The first Varsity 8+ boat of Mo McGrath, Samantha Allen, Lara. Schrock, Carissa Land, Missy Darnell, Josie McClellan, Katy Bockelman, Kelli White and Glenna Yokum finished second to Tulsa by just 2.8 seconds with a

"On the varsity level, I thought they raced pretty tough this morning," Hale said. "They are doing an excellent job for the first 1.000 meters. We haven't quite found our rhythm. They have been coming off the line nicely at 42 strokes per minute. They are right with the rest of the crews, but somewhere at the 11, 12, 13meter mark, they end up trying too hard and taking themselves out of their rhythm.

tasteless HUMOR

Contrived plot, low-brow jokes make movie lowest-rated film of semester and Jake Busey, this film makes "American Pie," and

"Roadtrip" look good. As most

I could feel my brain cells vanishing and my IQ dropping as I sat in the theater while watching "Tomcats," a low-brow ripoff of "Swingers." Hence, the lowest rating I've ever. given a movie in my life - a half star out of

The "plot" (albeit a very contrived one) involves a group of bachelors who make a pact to never get married.

The last one standing wins a ridiculously large sum of money.

MOVIE REVIEW BY CORBIN H. CRABLE

女会会会会 movies of its kind, it is geared toward college-aged males who, as the director of this movie seems to, have a taste for infantile toilet jokes and shockingly unfunny sight gags.

There are some things that are better left alone (such as mishaps with testicles), and "Tomcats" addresses such issues in graphic ways that will sicken even lovers of "There's Starring Jerry O'Connell, Shannon Elizabeth Something About Mary."

The movie makes few attempts at any other type of humor than the sick visual gags. Thereare, however, parodied scenes of "Mission Impossible: II" and "American Beauty," but, again, these references were lost on the audience I sat in:

As long as there is immaturity, there will be movies like "Tomcats." That is unavoidable. If you're looking for a good laugh, it can't be found in this movie.

If you're looking for tastelessness, though, Tomcats' has it in abundance.

Film lacks heart

The plot of the new Ashley Judd movie, "Someone Like You." is yet another example of another sappy romantic comedy that succeeds in being utterly predictable and only marginally endearing. ludd plays fane Gnodale. who works for a cutthroat talk show host with her leading men. and obviously hunky love interests. Ray Brown (Greg Kinnear, "As Good as it Gets"), and Eddie Alden (Hughlackman, "X-Men"), Jane's life becomes increasingly difficult as she tries to figure out the truth about love, sex and cows while creating a false doctor to write about all three.

The whole plot revolves around the old cow/new cow theory. When a bull breeds with a cow, he'll never go back. He doesn't want the old cow any more, he wants a new cow. The theory is that men have the same animalistic urges to find new women that makes bulls want to spread their seed by breeding with new cows. At least that part sounds interesting.

When Jane writes a column about the subject, posing as a 65year-old doctor, everyone wants her for an interview. Hmmmm, 1 wonder if her boss is going to want this.

doctor for an interview? The plot isn't the only predictable element - the characters' roles are so obvious they hurt. Ray is a sweet lovable guy who really isn't. and Eddie is the tough misogynist

MOVIE REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN who is sweet on the inside. Kinnear pulls flay off wonderfully and seeing him in the film shows, yet again, that he should be in better movies. Ashley Judd played herself. She always does, no surprise there:

> Jackman is who people should be paying attention to in this movie. After making a name for himself as the cigar-smoking superhero Wolverine in "X-Men," the question became whether he had any staying power. The truth is, his performance is less than uncanny. He overdoes the tough guy act way too much in the movie, but at least he looks good with his shirt off.

"Someone Like You" unfortunately doesn't have much heart to it. but if it's a romantic comedy you're looking for, this is about as good as any available. It seems Hollywood just can't put together a decent romantic comedy these days.

New album features rehash of old sounds

Skrape has succeeded in proving that it sound like they are truly taking a beating, is angry, loud and completely capable of making even a song titled "Sunshine" and you've got your standard new metal sound pissed off. "NEW KILLER AMERICA" On "New Killer America," the band ☆☆☆ makes a few moves ALBUM REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN in the right direction with its occasional tonality and complex arrange ments, but it is still the epitome of formula-driven new metal. The good news is that Skrape's talented vocals and hard musical style are sure to grab your attention. Vocalist Billy Keeton seems to blend the styles of Filter and Pantera into a tonally aware, yet, gritty However, the thing that keeps Skrape.

interesting is the electronica influence heard through some of the tracks, brought in by guitarist/keyboardist Brian Milner.

The bad news is that the album is still the tired, played-out, formulated style of new metal made popular by bands like Static-X. And there are plenty of bands pulling the formula off better than Skrape. Keeton screams phrases like, "I won't stop 'til the blood soaks my fingers." on "Isolated."

Back that up with some heavily distorted guitar riffs and drums that

This shouldn't be a surprise for any reason.

The producer, Ulrich Wild, has been making a career off the style, producing bands such as Static-X and Powerman 5000 for a while now. Metal fans will appreciate the aggressive, sneering, angry, in-your-face edge Wild has a propensity for bringing to any

The hand's first single, "Waste" has received some airplay, but it lacks the tonality the band shows it is capable of in songs like "Sunshine." A few samples and keyboard riffs add a nice electronica side to the music that the band would be much weaker without.

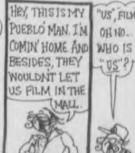

Within the next year or so, Skrape will have to choose if it wants to keep playing for testosterone-driven pubescent males and grow stagnant and forgotten or progress into something that has some staying power.

"New Killer America" shows some potential, and even if the band doesn't go anywhere, Milner has the talent to make seriously worthwhile music.

My Favorite Workout

Megan Meetz, an open option freshman from Dighton,

Kansas, enjoys coming to the Rec at least four times each week. She usually comes with a friend to do her workout. "Usually I do the circuit machines and then the ellip-probably like working out on the elliptical machine the Rec because it keeps me in shape and it also keeps me healthy. Working out also gives me energy," said Meetz. She encourages those who don't use the Rec on a regular basis to find a friend to work out with. "It makes it a lot more fun to work out with someone. My friends motivate me to come to the Rec, but the results are what makes me want to keep coming," said Meetz.

Unless you try to do something beyond what you have already mastered, you will never grow.

Denise Penka, senior in advertising, has worked as an assistant building supervisor ever since she came to K-

State in August of 1997, "I had received a brochure about the Rec in some of the recruiting information. Once I toured the Rec, I knew this was where I wanted to work," said Penka. She had worked at a recreational facility in her hometown of Great Bend, Kansas, so she knew what to expect at her job here. "I wanted to work at the Rec because I knew it would be a great opportunity for interaction," said Penka. Working here has allowed Penka to meet people that she wouldn't normally meet in her classes. It has also taught her how to effectively communicate with people. "Each individual's needs has to be Stephens. "Working here has given me the opportunity to work on my communicaapproached in a different way," said Penka. Penka plans to pursue a career in advertising in the Kansas City area after she graduates in May.

For Shawn Stephens, working at the Rec is the highlight of his day. "This is not a stressful job," said Stephens. "There has never been a day in the three years I have worked here that I didn't want to come to work." Stephens, a senior in Information Systems, is a building supervisor at the Rec. The main reason he chose to work at the service desk is the atmosphere it offers. "I wanted to work in the service area because that is where the action is," said Stephens. "Most of campus goes through here at some time, so I have met a lot of people. It's fun when I'm out and people recognize me." Working at the Rec has also taught Stephens some valuable lessons that he wouldn't have learned in the classroom. "Engineers aren't known for their personal skills," said tion skills and my patience with people." Stephens, a native of Wichita, will graduate in May. He has accepted a job with Spring and will be moving to Virginia.

NUTRITIONAL NOTES

Easter Egg Nutrition

For many families, coloring Easter eggs is an important tradition. And for many children, Easter wouldn't be complete without a hunt for those treats. Concerns about cholesterol and fat don't need to get in the way of fun this Easter. Eggs are excellent sources of protein and they provide iron, B-vitamins, and yes, fat. But like everything else, the number you eat is the key. One egg is just 75 calories and 4.5 grams of fat, approximately one-fourth of the fat is saturated and the remainder is unsaturated. Eggs have just over 200 milligrams of cholesterol, but four a week is fine for most people. If you plan an Easter egg display, make sure that you don't eat the eggs that have been out of the refrigerator for more than two hours. Use half the eggs for the display and put the others in the fridge and

Polls open today for commission

Registered voters can cast votes from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

Voting for Manhattan City Commission and the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board will be under way today.

Registered voters can go to their polling places between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. to cast their votes.

If voters prefer to do advanced voting, they can go to the Riley County Clerk's Office before noon today.

Rich Vargo, county clerk, said the voter turnout is expected to be very low. He said the voter turnout for the last two general elections for the city. school district were 22 and 26 percent.

"I think this year's voter turnout will be very close to that," he said.

The primary election for City Commission was Feb. 27 and had a 12 percent voter turnout.

Vargo said he's surprised more people don't show up to vote for City Commission.

"It's a big way for people to have a say in the process," he said. "These are the people that decide policies on your taxes, your kids' education and your community - things that have an impact on people's daily lives."

There are six candidates running for positions with the City Commission and three positions open, City Manager Ron Fehr said. Carol Peak, who recently dropped out of the race, still will be on the ballot.

Fehr said the top two candidates with the most votes serve a four-year term, and the third candidate will serve a two-year term.

He said also said he thinks it's important for people to get out and vote because the city commission establishes the policies by which the city government operates.

'It's important everyone qualified to exercise their vote do so for people who they feel best represent the needs of the community," he said.

Vargo said people can log onto www.co.riley.ks.us by 9 tonight to see the election results.

Campaign issues to decide election

Economic development, housing top list of concerns entering final day of race.

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

Five different campaigns for the Manhattan City Commission end today with the final day of voting and the winners are expected to take, or retake, their seats April 17.

But no matter who is elected, the two seated commissioners said the commission is bound to change in some ways and stay the same in others. Commissioners Bruce Snead and Ed Klimek both were elected to four-year terms in the 1999 elections, so their seats are not up for re-election until 2003.

Snead, as the top vote recipient in 1999, is up to be the next mayor of Manhattan, according to city tradition. Now serving his second four-year term, Snead said he has been a member of the commission for three transitions in membership.

"I look forward to working with the new commission, whatever its composition," he said.

While one obvious change in 2001 might be new commissioners and a period of acclimation. Snead said issues such as affordable housing. economic development and a city market analysis faced by the current commission will be the same ones facing the new one.

"It's pretty rare that you try to wrap things up," he said. "I don't see any big new challenges for the commission. There's enough stuff in the pipeline that paying attention to what's going on is a lot."

Klimek said one issue that has come up in the campaign has been a perception that commissioners dictate to the community instead of listening.

"I don't like that - whether it be true or not," he said. "I think we need to relate to the community better, whether that be new commissioners or the old makeup."

New commission candidates definitely are running on a fiscally

Duke wins men's NCAA title

By JIM O'CONNELL

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. - No comeback. No blowout. Just another Duke title in the Twin Cities.

The top-ranked Blue Devils won their third national championship - and second in the Metrodome - with an 82-72 victory over Arizona on Monday night.

With All-Americans Jason Williams and Shane Battier having off nights, sophomores Mike Dunleavy and Carlos Boozer picked up the slack, and Mike Krzyzewski moved into impressive coaching company.

Still well behind UCLA's John Wooden's 10 national championships, Krzyzewski moved one. behind Kentucky's Adolph Rupp and tied his college coach, Bob Knight, who won three at Indiana.

To get to this game, Duke (35-4) had to overcome a 22-point deficit in Saturday's semifinal win over Maryland. The last time the Blue Devils won it all, it was by 20 points.

The loss ended Arizona's bittersweet season and kept the Wildcats (28-8) from matching their own record of beating three No. 1 seeds in the NCAA tournament, as they did when they won it all in 1997.

Duke's other titles came in consecutive years, and the second in 1992 was won in this building after the same trip through the tournament -Greensboro, N.C., Philadelphia and Minneapolis for the Final Four.

Dunleavy, playing in front of his father, Portland Trail Blazers coach Mike Dunleavy, led Duke with 21 points, 18 in the second half.

Dunleavy hit a career-high four threepointers, while Boozer, who returned last weekend after missing six games with a broken foot, had 12 points and 12 rebounds.

Battler, the national player of the year, had 18 points, 11 rebounds and six assists. Williams, saddled with foul trouble, had 16 points on 5for-15 shooting

Duke is the first No. 1-ranked team to win the national championship since UCLA in 1995.

Loren Woods had 22 points to lead Arizona, the team that rebounded from a poor start and overcame the death of coach Lute Olson's wife Ian. I to reach the championship game.

Duke, which set NCAA records this season for three-pointers made and attempted, finished Emery S. Pluff, of South St. Paul, Minn., was arrested in February for allegedly robbing and molesting his wife (which he did, police said, pretending he was a stranger). For reasons not yet apparent, Pluff allegedly faked going to work on the morning of Jan. 30 and instead donned a black cape and a Halloween mask the family kept in the garage and entered the house, where he surprised his wife and dragged her into a back room. She apparently was not the least bit puzzled by her perpetrator's identity and asked Emery repeatedly why he was doing this. According to police. Emery replied. "I'm not Emery " Police said Emery then took some money from his wife and fled, winding up at work. where he was arrested.

FAA investigators look into Aspen plane crash ASPEN, Colo. - The Federal Aviation Administration launched an investigation into why a warning against nighttime bad-weather landings at the Aspen airport apparently never reached the tower before the crash of an executive jet that left 18 people dead. The FAA warning, issued two Air traffic controllers apparently did not receive the warning and gave the charter pilot permission for an instrument landing Thursday in light snow. Moments later, the twinengine Gulfstream III crashed a few hundred yards from the runway. killing all 15 passengers and three crew members.

D.C. Auman explained the importance of evaluating job offers and employee benefit plans to about 25 K-State students Monday night.

"I've seen people turn down jobs with better benefits packages just because they are offered $1,000 more by another company with less benefits," said Auman, former K-State economies and finance instructor. "Making that decision could be a mistake."

"Show Me the Money!" was the theme of Monday's Career and Employment Services presentation by Auman, investment representative at Edward Jones Investments of Manhattan.

From retirement plans such as 401ks, 403bs, SIMPLE and Roth IRAs to the best options for health insurance, Auman highlighted the specific charac teristics of benefit packages prospective employees should be aware of when taking or changing jobs.

"All companies have their own unique ways of handling their plans, but the plans themselves have many things in common." he said.

The larger, established corporations will offer 401ks to their employees, where the employee invests pre-tax dollars, and the company matches the money with a specific amount, Auman said. He said the amount matched by the employer is decided individually by each company.

"A 403b is basically the same type of plan, except they are offered to employees of public institutions and non-profit organizations," Auman said

"Retirement doesn't mean quitting. You must set realistic goals for retirement now and invest in things that are important to you."

Along with choosing the best retirement plans. Auman emphasized key elements in investing wisely and the rewards of long-term investing.

"You can retire with over $1 million without having to put in large amounts of money - if you invest steadily and consistently over the years," Auman said.

"The most definitive key to longterm investing is diversification or investing money in different types of accounts.

Auman stressed the importance of being educated about where one's money should go and who is handling

"It's empowering to be able to take control of your money and watch it grow," she said.

Laurie Garris, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said she viewed the presentation as very successful.

"Students seem to be very interested in these types of presentations. and they have good questions. D.C. is very knowledgeable of the information, which proves to be helpful to the students," Garris said.

David Haas, senior in computer engineering, said he learned valuable information from Auman.

"I attended the presentation because I'm graduating in May, and I wanted to learn a little bit more about health insurance and what to look for," Haas said.

Garris said the type of information provided in this particular fashion, as well as other presentations sponsored by Career and Employment Services, is not available to students anywhere else.

"K-State provides what students as potential employees need to know." he

Despite U.S. demands, China denies access to fallen Navy plane

By ROBERT BURNS The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - President Bush on Monday demanded China arrange the prompt and safe return of 24 U.S. crew members and their plane packed with spy technology. seeking to end a standoff reminiscent of the Cold War.

But despite U.S. demands for immediate access to the crew and aircraft, China indicated that access would not be granted before Tuesday night, China time, White House spokesman Scott McClellan said

"We find it very troubling about the lack of speed. We continue to press for prompt access," McClellan said.

Earlier, Bush said he was dismayed U.S. diplomats had not been given access to the crew after the plane made an emergency landing on the Chinese Island of

"I'm troubled by the lack of a timely Chinese response to this request for this access," he said on the White House lawn. Bush said failure to comply would be inconsistent with standard diplomatic

"Our priorities are the prompt and safe return of the crew and the return of the aircraft without further damaging or tampering," he said.

The U.S. plane collided with a Chinese jet lighter early Sunday. Pentagon spokesman Rear Adm. Craig Quigley said the spy plane's left engine and left wing were damaged. The plane is from an electronic reconnaissance squadron whose home base is Whidbey Island Naval Air Station in Washington state.

U.S. officials sought to keep Chinese officials from boarding the Navy plane and ordered three Navy destrovers to stay near the island.

At an appearance later Monday with Egypt's president, Bush declined to address reports Chinese officials may have boarded the U.S. plane but said he was sending a "very clear message, and I expect them to heed the message." Bush also stated the United States believes its plane was in international airspace, not inside the lack of access to the crew of the nurboprop-driven EP-3, which is about the size of a Boeing 737 commercial jetliner.

Gen. Henry H. Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, protested

*Under international law, that should've happened long ago, Shelton said in an interview. "We should have had access," He said it was "hard to imagine" the U.S. plane had initiated the collision.

China blames the U.S. plane for the crash, saying it suddenly veered into one of its F-8 fighters.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said the crew had communicated after the collision to Indicate no one was injured, but he said no one has spoken directly to them since they landed on Hainan.

Bush said U.S. officials had been in contact with the Chinese since the incident, which happened Saturday night U.S. time.

He offered assistance in finding the missing Chinese jet, one of two he said were shadowing the American plane when the collision happened. "Our military stands ready to help.

Chinese representatives have told U.S. officials the crew is safe, McClellan said.

The U.S. destroyers happened to have stopped at Hong Kong en route home from the Persian Gulf when the EP-3 was forced to land, two officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity

The destroyers will remain in the area indefinitely instead of resuming their journey home, the officials said. Bush discussed the incident

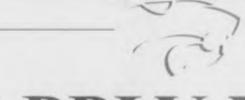

Monday with his national security team, including Secretary of State Colin Powell, Rumsfeld and Condoleezza Rice, the national security adviser to the president.

A senior U.S. Navy admiral said Monday that Chinese officials have no right to board the U.S. plane.

Adm. Dennis Blair, commander in chief of the U.S. Pacific Command, said the plane, which contains sensitive cryptological and other electronic surveillance equipment, is considered sovereign territory, similar to an embassy.

"We physically cannot prevent the Chinese from boarding the plane," he said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

"What protects the plane really is the concept of sovereign immunity."

Regular exercise can offer enjoyment

I'm the last person you'd expect to be a fitness freak. When people look at me, they tend to think, "Gee. That guy has the physique of a true English major.

And they're right. For years, I was convinced that people who woke up at ungodly hours in order to go to the gym and do unnatural things to their bodies were raving imbeciles.

After all, why on earth would any sane person go through so much trouble simply to get rid of some excess calories? Think about it - those calories are valuable potential energy. Save the energy, for heaven's sake. There are children in thirdworld countries who would give various limbs to have the poten tial energy in your little ine.

And so I rested on my obvious intellectual superiority for many delightful, carefree years, getting up only to obtain more Twinkies and Nutty Bars every so often. After all, one must maintain one's energy levels and all that. Then, one fateful day,

Mental illnesses to blame for recent school shootings

A perfect example of popular mass ignorance is the false belief that the children who perpetrate random school mass shootings are products of poor parenting or a violent uncaring society.

The true culprit in most of these cases is mental illness and the greater society that stigmatizes this disease and fails to recognize it as a serious medical condition.

Take Kipland "Kip" Kinklel, who in the year before Columbine killed his parents and then went on a shooting spree at his high school in Springfield, Ore.

Kip came from a loving and nurturing home and a comfortable community. His parents, Bill and Faith, were well-respected teachers who were active in the community. His older sister excelled in academics and eventually went to a university on an athletic scholarship.

But it was evident from an early age that Kip had troubles.

In elementary school, Kip repeated the first grade due to slow emotional and physical development. He was also diagnosed with dyslexia.

From very early on, Kip showed a strong interest in guns. His parents forbid him any toy with violent overtones, but about the age of 11, Kip wore down his parents and received a BB gun and later a knife. This was the start of

In sixth grade Kip started hearing voices, but never told anybody. Kip entered middle school as a lonely, uneven student who was athletically disinclined. By this point, Kip was easily angered and had developed a hot temper

Kip started making bombs. Years later he revealed to his psychologist that exploding bombs helped relieve his stress and frustration

After much pestering by Kip and advice sought by his dad, Bill gave Kip his boyhood shotgun for Kip's 12th birthday. Kip could only use the gun in Bill's presence. Bill thought this might be a way for father and son to connect. Secretly, Kip started his own gun collection.

In eighth grade, Kip was arrested twice. Kip met with a state juvenile psychologist who was impressed with the approach Kip's parents were taking and noted that Kip was atypical from other delinquent kids in that he was remorseful and forthcoming about his part in the crimes. Kip was not acting out of rebellion.

Faith believed that family counseling was needed. Bill didn't believe in therapy, but he relented.

Over the course of counseling, Kip was diagnosed with major depressive disorder.

Counseling helped Kip manage anger. but he was still depressed and interested in guns and explosives.

Trouble at school resulted in two suspensions. Prozae was recommended.

Kip now got along swell with parents. He was less irritable and depressed and had regained his appetite. Three months after starting Prozac, Kip and his parents believed he was cured and discontinued both counseling and medication.

Kip started high school in 1997 and, by his dad's wishes, went out for football. Being small and unathletic, Kip's feelings of worthlessness were reinforced. In a journal, Kip recorded his everincreasing rage and alienation.

The fall of 1997 also saw the school shootings in Pearl, Miss., and West Paducah, Ky., and that spring in Jonesboro, Ark. Friends remember how Kip talked about how he'd have conducted the shootings differently.

On May 20, 1998, Kip bought a stolen gun at school. He was arrested and charged with a felony. Police noted that Kip was extremely cooperative. Kip also got expelled from school.

Bill picked his son up from the police and took him home. Kip believed that his actions both shamed and embarrassed his dad and that his dad couldn't live with the stigma. Kip loved his dad, but through twisted logic felt his only course of action was to get his gun. At 3:30 p.m. while his dad sat at the kitchen table, Kip aimed at the back of his father's head and fired. At 4:40 p.m., Kip told two friends in a conference call, "It's" over ... everything's over ... it's done ... nothing matters now." He says nothing about his dad.

DAVID LEVIN

VINCE JACOBSON/Collegian

At 6:30 p.m., Faith arrived home knowing nothing of the day's events. Kip told his mom he loved her, then shot her six times.

The next day, Kip went to school, killed two and wounded

At trial, two psychologists claimed Kip to be delusional. Another doctor presented CAT scans that show Kip's brain functions abnormally. It also came out in trial that mental illness. including schizophrenia, occurred in Kip's extended family.

Dropping the claim of insanity, Kip received 111 years in prison with no parole.

Every day there are thousands of kids bullied at school who don't respond with extreme violence. It's the mental illness that creates the academic difficulties, the violent and difficult behavior and the peculiarities that makes the child standout and thus be a target for bullying

Kip's sole time of feeling normal was when he was in therapy and on Prozac. The sole mistake was to think he was cured.

People don't think twice about seeing a doctor for hypertension and having to take pills for it the test of their lives. Yet we believe that mental illness is a personality flaw that we can fight through or perhaps take medication for a couple of weeks, and then we're

Many cases of mental illness result from chronic causes that are physiological, neurological and/or biochemical in nature. It's is not something one can just get over.

Poor parenting and a violent culture might play a role in some cases of student violence, but the deeper problem lies in a woefully undersized and undervalued mental health system, particularly for youth.

Student studying in Italy creates Web site to share travel experiences, stay in touch

By COLLEEN FOOTE Kansas State Collegian

Brad Mirakian is keeping in touch with K-State student life by studying Mirakian, senior in management information systems, created a Web site dedicated to his study abroad experience. This semester, Mirakian has been studying at the Consortium International University in Paderno del Grappa, Italy.

"I brought a digital camera with me to Italy, and since I am saving my pictures on the computer anyway. I decided to post some of them on a Web site," Mirakian said. "I thought this would be the best way to share my traveling with everyone at home."

The College of Business Administration is sponsoring his Web site, cba.ksu.edivorg/italy. Julie Katz. business adviser in the college, said Mirakian is putting to use the skills he learned from his studies at K-State.

"Brad has high intellect and strong leadership skills," Katz said. "It's wonderful that students gain abilities to enhance our program. It makes the university a global center."

The Web site contains three sections; pictures from places be has visited, a links section and a forum where students in the program, as well as anyone else, can discuss traveling. Mirakian said his Web site has received a good response from other students.

The most overwhelming reaction to the site I've gotten is jealousy. which is pretty much what I was aiming for," he said. "Actually, everyone I've received mail from has been very impressed with the pictures and places I've visited."

Barry Michie, director of the study abroad program, said he thinks the Web site is great because it provides available information for other students who are thinking about studying abroad.

"Students always want to know.

what other students' experiences have been." Michie said. "All hats off to him. I wish every student would do Mirakian said over half of the Web site's daily hits come from the United States, and the rest come from Italy.

"The site has encouraged me to visit as many places as possible while I am over here, not just for myself, but to share with everyone back home." he said. "I love to travel, see new places, meet new people and experience new things."

During his time in Europe. Mirakian also has traveled to Switzerland and Germany. He said he still plans to visit Greece, Austria, the Czech Republic and Spain.

Mirakian said he has enjoyed being able to share his travels with everyone on the Web. He said he would like to continue to travel in the

"I'm not completely sure what career I will pursue, but it will most likely involve computers, networking Web design, et cetera," he said. "Whatever I choose to do, I hope to continue traveling and seeing new

Senate approves bill to reform campaign finance

By DAVID ESPO

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C .- The Senate approved landmark legislation Monday to reduce the influence of big money in political campaigns, capping a fierce six-year struggle that catapulted Sen. John McCain to national prominence.

The 59-41 vote set the stage for a battle in the House, the next in a series of hurdles for a bill that also must gain President Bush's signature and withstand a promised court challenge to its constitution-

Bush will look at it when it. reaches his desk. It's still going through the legislative process, White House spokesman Scott McClellan said.

Jubilant supporters bailed the Senate's action as a signal that campaign finance laws likely are to be changed for the first time since the Watergate era.

"Average citizens are being deprived of the right of free speech when the megaphones are held by wealthy people," said McCain, R-Ariz., who often has argued that the current system of unlimited soft money donations to the parties

encourages corruption

Sen. Russ Feingold of Wisconsin. the bill's leading Democratic supporter, said passage would put a lasting mark on the record of democracy.

Opponents battled to the end against a measure they said was flawed. "The bill is fatally unconstitutional" said Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., calling it an infringement on free speech. In addition, he said, "The underlying theory is that there is too much money in politics, in spite of the fact that last year Americans spent more on potato chips than they did

One opponent, Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., skewered fellow senators for voting for the legislation in disregard of the substance. which he said was unconstitutional and would damage the political parties. "At least I am sober enough to vote 'no," he said.

The legislation would ban socalled soft money, typically fiveand six-figure contributions to political parties by unions, corporations and individuals. Republicans and Democrats combined took in nearly $500 million in such funds over the past two years.

Wefald's role vital to athletic success

He's been called the coach of coaches, the dean of deans, and "the man behind the mission." Whatever you call him, President Jon Wefald is nothing short of an athletic lifesaver.

When it comes to recruiting athletes, Wefald stands alone.

"That guy can sell," Jim Wooldridge, men's basketball coach, said. "He's K-State's leading ambassador for sports, and he wants winners here."

The evidence is more than compelling. Wefald is the only university president in the country, or one of a handful of presidents. who plays an expressly active role in the recruitment of student athletes.

"We've got a president that loves sports," Jim McLaughlin, women's volleyball coach, said. "He's one of the most unique things about this university. I've never had a president do the things that he does."

What Wefald does is recruit for the four most visible teams at K-State: the men and women's basketball teams, the football team and the volleyball team. His role as a recruiter is so important and unique that, according to women's basketball coach Deb Patterson, Wefald is one of a kind.

"In my 15 years as an assistant coach at several universities, the door to the president's office was never open. Here at K-State, that door is never shut.

The story is no different for football. The team just inked its highest-rated recruiting class in recent memory, and one recruit, Victor Mann, listed his conversation with Wefald as the reason he chose the Wildcats. That is unheard of in college sports. "Wefald has set the precedent," Bill Snyder, head football coach, said. "At other institutions, this just isn't happening."

His role in recruiting is extensive. He is host to lunches, he writes letters and fields phone calls from recruits. He spends time with parents, discusses academics, and sells K-State in every area, from scholarships to student life.

"He has made himself available a month in advance, a week in advance, a day in advance, if that's what we need." Patterson said.

The result? "Other universities are on their heels." Wefald said. That's because other university presidents don't or won't or can't match the intensity and commitment Wefald puts into every single recruit. And he does so with a

"Ten minutes of my time can make a world of difference. You never know what will impress a student."

That's not ego speaking. That's just insight from a man who knows the scope of his effect and uses it to build universal success.

In the midst of recruiting athletes. Wefald has found a way to balance academics and sports in a manner that allows each to flourish. Under his watch, the Wildcat Renaissance has been kind to both sides of the campus.

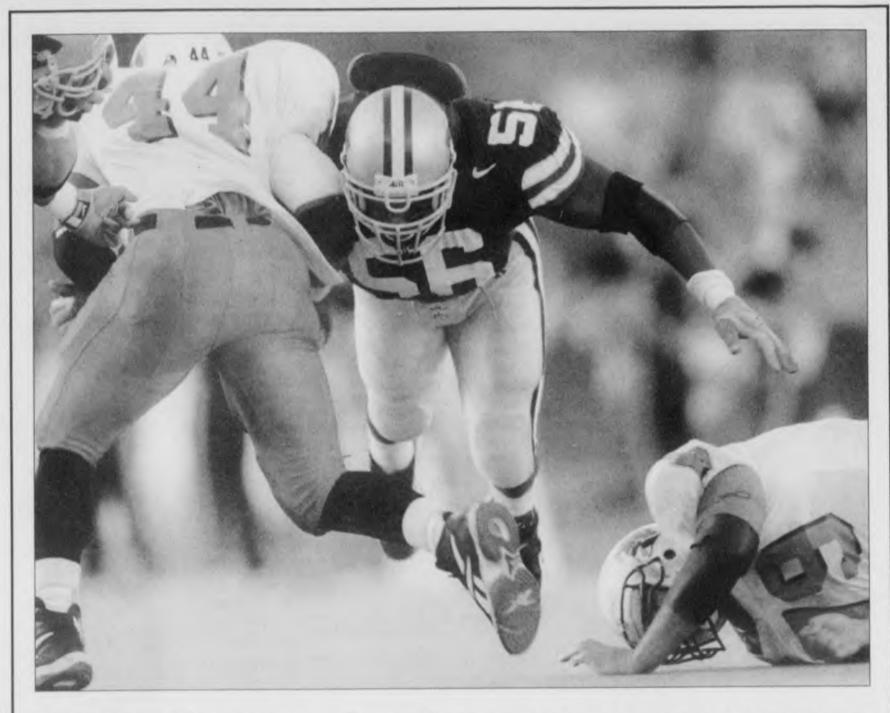

Anyone who spends more than five minutes with Wefald walks away knowing how many Rhodes, Truman and Marshall Scholars that K-State has had in the past 10 years. (The answer: enough to put a scare into the likes of Michigan, North Carolina and any other academically proud institutions).

"We try to have a balance between academics and athletics," Wefald said. "We try to get All-Americans in both.

What comes across as warm, fatherly pride is part of a wellpolished sales pitch that never lets up, and almost always works.

"You know, I'm a modern-day William jennings Bryant,"

VOCAL LEADERSHIP

Sophomore linebacker chosen as player representative

Kansas State Collegian

Terry Pierce always has had a big mouth. From his days at Western Hills High School in Fort Worth, Texas, Pierce was anything but shy when it came to football. In fact, the three-time team MVP could be found electrifying his teammates not only through his play on the field, but through his words as well.

After all, vocal leadership is something that's asked of the middle linebacker position, Pierce said, and he can't be hesitant to follow suit.

"Playing middle linebacker, you've got to be vocal. A lot of times, the defense revolves around what you do and how youal you are," he said. "Like when we get in third-down situations, somebody has to be the one to say, 'Hey, let's go sit down. Let's get this and go make this play."

And despite being a redshirt freshman at K-State last season. Pierce made it clear he was going to be the one to do just that, cornerback Terence Newman said.

"Terry's a freshman, but on the field he's more like a junior or senior. He really

Varsity rowers fall short twice to UMass at Jayhawk Invitational

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's First Varsity 8+ boat didn't beat the University of Massachusetts on Sunday at the Jayhawk Invitational in Lawrence, but the rowers got just what they needed. "They fought hard with UMass. We were down four seconds, but fought back through our sprints," head coach Jenny Hale said. "The fact that the team went out and had a strong sprint made me proud. It came on the end of a long weekend of rowing.

"We needed a good performance from the Varsity, and with only two weeks on the water, I think we got one."

The boat finished with a time of 6:59.5, just 3.3 seconds behind

The Second Varsity boat's race against UMass had a similar result, as the Cats' time of 7:37.4 was 15 seconds short of first place, but the feeling was different after the loss.

"The Second Varsity raced really strong in the first 1,000 meters," Hale said. "They were only a second off of UMass at the 1,000-meter mark. They stopped pushing the boat, and that was discouraging. We have to do a better job of taking care of the second half of the race."

The First Novice 8+ boat placed third behind Kansas and Indiana, but its time of 7:56.3 was good enough to finish ahead of Tulsa.

"The First Novices struggled a little bit this weekend overall," Novice head coach Kevin Harris said. "They felt like they had a much better race on the second day. They put together a solid race in the first 1,000 meters. However, we struggled a little bit in the second 1,000 meters. KU has a good Novice 8. We have raced Tulsa three times, and this time we were able to break away from them cleanly."

The Second Novice 8+ boat finished behind Kansas with a time of 7:59.1.

Hinds takes 2nd at Stanford

Mikos sets personal record, Lee places 3rd at Florida meet.

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

Two K-State track athletes returned from the Stanford Invitational on Saturday and Sunday with top-10 finishes.

Senior NCAA All-American Korene Hinds placed second in the 1,500 meters with a NCAA provisional-qualifying time of 4:20.88. Her time was just .39 seconds shy of her personal best despite running in a race that lagged at the beginning.

"After the initial slow pace, Korene really picked up the pace well throughout the rest of the race," distance coach Rod Cole said. "She is poised for a very good outdoor season.

For her efforts. Hinds was named an athlete of the week by the K-State coaching staff, along with fellow runner Shadrack Kimeli. The junior placed seventh in the 5,000 meters, and his 13:49.11 time set a K-State record, breaking the previous mark of 13:49.5 set in 1972 by Rick Hitchcock at the NCAA Championships.

Shadrack's hard consistent training and attention to detail is beginning to pay off," Cole said. "He is just scratching the surface of what he can do in the sport."

In the women's 5,000 meters, sophomore Amy Mortimer finished 18th with a time of 15:39.23.

The final two coaches' picks for athletes of the week were freshman Joseph Lee and junior Leslie Mikos.

Lee finished third in the 800 meters at the Florida Relays on Saturday with a time of 1:49.88, a season-best mark.

"Joseph continues to show steady improvement, and he ran a very competitive race against a strong field," assistant coach Michael Smith said. "With continued consistency, he should do very well at the end of the season and be among the best 800 meter runners in the conference."

Mikos set a personal record in the hammer throw with a mark of 177-0 to finish second at the Florida Relays. She also finished fourth in the discuss with a season-best toss of 153-6.

"Leslie had a great meet," throws coach Steve Fritz said. "She not only threw an eightfoot personal record in the hammer, but she came back the next day to have a season best in the discus by four feet."

K-State returns to action at the Texas Relays from Wednesday through Saturday.

surprised me because he was a vocal leader out on the field last year," Newman said. "When things were getting tough, he'd be the one that stands up and yells and tries to get everybody's head into it.

"So I knew he was going to be special at that moment.'

The defensive coaching staff seemed to agree, as Pierce started at middle linebacker in K-State's final six games, including the Wildcats' 35-21 victory over Tennessee in the Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl.

He finished the year with 39 total tackles, 11th on the team, with season-highs of seven tackles against both Ball State and Nebraska.

As a result, Newman said, the Cat defense saw that Pierce not only had a knack for motivating the team vocally, but he had the physical playmaking ability to back those words up as well.

"When you've got a freshman out there getting in your face and telling you that you've got to step up and make a play, and then he steps and makes a play, people take notice of that," Newman said.

Regardless, Pierce doesn't believe his leadership is anything special after all, all the great linebackers play that way, he said.

"I watch TV all the time and watch NFL linebackers talk and yell. It's just the nature of the position," Pierce said. "Most of the time, NFL linebackers and linebackers in the college ranks - that's just how we are. I think, as a personality, that's just the way we are.'

Not that many would argue with a player of Pierce's size or speed. He stands at 6 feet, 3 inches and 245 pounds, while boasting a 4.6-second time in the 40-yard dash. Not to mention strength - Pierce broke three K-State weightlifting records this winter, with 470 pounds in the bench press, 417 in the incline and 923 in the

Even as a redshirt in 1999, he was one of two players presented with the Overachiever Award for strength and conditioning.

Add to that a 3.4 grade point average, and it might have been no wonder Pierce was selected during the off-season as a player representative for the upcoming 2001 season.

Yet, it still was a shock to the freshman in hindsight.

"It was a big-time surprise," Pierce said, "because I know that doesn't happen very often up here. It just says that the team has a lot of respect for me, and it means that I have to fulfill what everybody thinks."

In fact, K-State fans might remember the last Wildcat middle linebacker to be named player representative for his sophomore season - All-American Mark Simoneau (1996-99), who sits third on the school tackle charts with 400 stops during his career.

Senior strong safety Ion McGraw said he believes the similarities between the two linebackers are more than coincidental.

"I think the award is a real tribute to Terry and to his talent," McGraw said, "and I wouldn't be surprised if he doesn't follow right along where Mark left off."

Wefald said.

That might be true, but the man who was known as one of the greatest orators of all time didn't have a closing pitch like the one that Wefald's got.

K-State's top recruiter bleeds purple from a heart of gold and has a touch that would make King Midas green with envy. He simply never lets up.

As we talked in his office, he received, through no small twist of fate, a phone call from Charles Baker, assistant coach of the men's basketball team. Baker was in Oakland with a potential recruit. Wefald got the recruit on the phone, and launched into a sales pitch for K-State that was so thorough and convincing it would have had Roy Williams strapping on the purple and white.

He knew the recruit's position, high school and family history. He spoke effortlessly with the player about how he would fit into the K-State system, and before the conversation was over, Wefald had made a commitment to speak with the recruit's grandparents later in the evening. For Wefald, that's important.

"Parents are amazed," Patterson said. "They understand how unique it is to have a president who is going to know their child's name, ask about their course work, and know when they excel. How often doesn't. Period." And it's not just the rarity of Wefald's role that has an impact. It's his flair that leaves a lasting impression.

does that happen elsewhere? It

"After you've met with him, if you don't have a sense for his brilliance and his passion for this university then you don't have a heartbeat." Patterson said. "Any concerned parent with an interest in their child's career feels impacted in a major way."

So why does Wefald care so much about sports at K-State? "I think deep down he's got a little coach in him," McLaughlin said. With or without a coaching instinct, Wefald has been nothing less than a small miracle for K-State

"I've been blessed to have what I consider to be the finest president any coach could have." Snyder said.

But then again, what else could we expect from Wefald, the man who set the intramural record for touchdown passes at Pacific Lutheran College in the late 1950s?

The man who claims to have had a cannon for a throwing arm has hit the bullseye time after time in athletic recruiting.

But the question remains: can he still throw?

"Let me put it this way: If the guy is open, I always hit him"

In recruiting, as in academics and life, Wefald rarely misses his

Senate debates minimum wage

By JANELLE CARTER The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Senate Republican and Democratic leaders are close to an agreement that would allow a minimum wage bill to be debated some time next month, officials said Monday.

"This is going to be done, and it's going to be done sooner rather than later." Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., told reporters Monday. "We're looking at doing a freestanding bill some time in May.

Senate officials said Lott and Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle have been negotiating a consent agreement that would call for a vote before Congress goes on its Memorial Day recess.

The ongoing discussions call for a minimum wage hill to be offered by Senate Assistant Majority Leader Don Nickles of Oklahoma, Senate aides said. Democrats would be allowed to offer one amendment, which likely would be a substitute measure.

"I hope that we would have it set up in such a way where it didn't just get amended to death by unrelated, non-germane amendments," Lott said. "We would keep a focus on the issue itself."

A spokesman for Nickles would not discuss the type of bill the senator is crafting, but last year, Republicans offered a plan to raise the $5.15 hourly wage $1 over two years.

Last year, minimum wage proposals were attached to a Senate bankruptcy bill and a House tax-relief package. Both efforts were later abandoned.

Democrats complained that the Republican plan, which increased the minimum wage by 50 cents a year over two years, was too small. Sen. Edward Kennedy, the ranking Democrat on the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, instead has led a push to increase the minimum wage by $1.50 over three years.

President Bush has said he favors a minimum wage increase if states are allowed to opt out.

LOCAL TALENT

WHO: Invalid

Invalid has been together for about a year and wants to spread its hard-edged sound in Manhattan. The three-piece band is composed of guitarist and vocalist Royce Russell, bassist Irin Mawhirter and drummer Mario

Russell, sophomore in computer science, said its aggressive hard-rock style is similar to bands like Silverchair and the Deftones. Lately, the band is trying to get more shows in

The initial goal of the band was to compete in the Wichita Battle of the Bands last summer, where it took third in the competition, Russell said.

Russell said he and Mawhirter usually write the song together and a five song demo of their work, titled "Paragon," is available on the band's Web site. The Web site www.invalid.f2s.com contains information about the band. Russell said it is important to him that audiences relate to "Most of the time we just try to relate to the audience and let them know that we've had the same experiences as all of them," he said. "We want them to feel that."

A BMX rider sits quietly watching others ride at Junction City Skate Park on Saturday afternoon. This particular park is a recent installation due to the growing popularity of BMX riding.

A Relaxing Ride

BMX bikers hit trails for personal enjoyment, love of challenge

By JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

When the weather warms up and the spring weekends dry the ground. Carl-Hebert fastens the wheels of his customized BMX hike to the rack on top of his car and drives

Every weekend we can, we try going places to ride," he said. "This summer, we want to get out to California and ride some of the parks there, and maybe North Carolina on the East coast. Traveling with your bike just is the most fun I can imagine.

Andy Gilstrap, sophomore in openoption, said he and Hebert usually end up traveling every other weekend with local friends. Riding provides time to forget worries and spend time with friends, he said:

Riding improves Hebert's general outlook, he said

"When you're out there riding, you don't think about anything else," he said. "It's become a part of my life I have to fill. and if it's not part of my life, I'm in a bad

Such a love for the sport takes a toll. Brian Williams, senior in milling science. said hikers get injured often, and be's no exception. Williams said his injuries include a broken collar bone, a broken wrist, a broken thumb and an incident that left his leg gashed open, requiring six "People wreck all the time," he said. "If you're gonna grow some balls and try stuff out, then you're going to get hurt sometimes.

With a rolled-up pant leg, Gilstrap showed the scar on his shin from a bad wreck before crouching down with audible popping sounds from his knees.

"I can't wait 'til I'm 30 and standing in line for knee surgery," he said.

Williams said the pain was no deterrent for people who love to ride, and the scrapes, bruises, headaches and broken bones are all worth it. It's important just to learn how to wreck without getting hurt, he said. Getting away from the bike when it goes down is important, and Williams said people get burt the most when trying to hang on and save a trick.

Besides learning how to crash, it is important for riders to have confidence in what they do, Hebert said. When approaching a difficult ride, Hebert said he acts like he knows he won't have a

"You have to be able to picture yourself doing it or you're going to eat it," he said.

Before worrying about how to crash or building confidence, the first thing a rider has to worry about is getting a hike Williams said that with about $1,000 put into his bike, he feels comfortable, which is important. Williams said it is rare for anyone to buy a complete bike because the customized components are important. Williams said finding a strong 20-inch frame is the beginning. The rims, hubs and even spokes are often reinforced so they can handle the hardships the bikes experienced. Another key element is the way the pedals are set up. Williams said.

"You usually need a three-piece crank for pedaling," he said, "Most bikes you buy just have one continuous bar that connects both pedals when you ride, but this has three separate pieces, which allows for more control."

option, said the fact that he has worked in multiple bike shops has helped him to find plenty of decent equipment for his bike. Anton said he has invested worked in shops since he was a sophomore in high school, which has helped him save money on parts, even though he has more than $1,000 in his current bike.

Because of the goal of having a bike built to withstand anything. Hebert said their weight is significantly more than a mountain bike.

T've got my 20-inch BMX that weighs about 40 pounds and a bigger mountain hike that weighs about 25 pounds," he said. "It's important to remember that when you switch bikes or you can really mess yourself up."

The three main types of BMX biking are street, park and trail biking, and each has its own type of challenges and appeal, Hebert said.

Street biking is riding through fown and using obstacles that are placed throughout the city, such as park benches rails and curbs, for tricks. Gilstrap said it's fun to ride through the city and find new things to use all the time.

Since most cities have ordinances against using city fixtures for such purposes, Hebert said it sometimes isn't worth the bassle to ride the streets.

Park biking is using skate and bike parks with structures like ramps and halfpipes for riding. Gilstrap said in a park each riders' style shows in the choices they make.

"At parks, you can learn everything about them and improve your ability on that setup," he said. "Everyone rides them differently too. Some people take lines you would have never thought of and you learn from that."

Trail biking is riding a BMX on a dirt trail with various jumps set up over a complete trail. Hebert said the smoothness riders learn from trail riding shows in all aspects of their style so the experience is invaluable

Williams said he often works on the trails located near the Ramada Plaza Hotel, digging and building up the jumps and keeping the diri smooth. The jumps usually are four to six feet tall, and the challenge of a trail is to have a smooth ride from jump to jump, Williams said.

Though competitions exist for BMX riding. Williams said he doesn't ride to be better than other people. For him it is more about seeing friends and pushing each other to improve. Williams said even though it seems like every time he comes home he's bleeding from somewhere he will only quit when he no longer enjoys it.

"For now I don't see myself ever not enjoying it," he said. "When I'm 30, if this is something I want to do, I will. When I'm an old man, if I can still get on my bike and do this, then I will."

We're online again... Buy your student football and basketball tickets on KATS

A few quick questions (and answers) re: the process...

- WHO'S ELIGIBLE? K-State students enrolled for Fall 2001 hours.
- WHERE'S THE SITE? The Marketplace is located within the KATS site on the KSU home page at www.ksu.edu.
- HOW? Any student having access to a computer, on campus or off, with a web browser will be able to access the KATS/Marketplace and order student season tickets.
- WHEN? Right Now! You may buy your season tickets at the same time you enroll on KATS. A schedule is again located on the KATS page if you need to see a specific access date and time.
- WHY SELL THIS WAY? Last year's experience proved the KATS system works! No long lines and the ability to purchase from home or campus locations. If you have a computer with a web broswer, you're there.
- IS THERE A PLACE I CAN GET ADDITIONAL INFORMATION AND VIEW THE SITE AHEAD OF TIME? Yes, there is a FAQ page on KATS that has information on a range of topics. And while you won't be able to complete an order at that time for your ticket, you'll be able to view the choices and get familiar with the KATS/ Marketplace site.
- IS THERE SOMEONE I CAN CALL REGARDING QUESTIONS? Yes, you can call the Athletic Department Ticket Office at 532-7606 or the toll free number, 1-800-221-CATS, for additional information.

1 incumbent, 2 new commissioners elected Tuesday

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

With results in Tuesday night for the Manhattan City Commission elections, two new commissioners are preparing to serve and one to return. Mark Taussig and Brad Everett, both new to the commission, came in first and second, respectively. According to election rules, each receives a four-year term. Incumbent Roger Reitz came in third and thus is given a two-year term on the five-member body.

Taussig, who came in first with 4,094 votes, heard the news with family in the Riley County Clerk's office shortly after

"It feels really good," he said after hearing the final results from the 35

Manhattan precincts. Taussig said the results reflected a public desire for a commission that is

"It's going to be like giving the city back to the community," he said.

more attentive to the public.

Taussig said Mayor Karen McCulloh and Commissioner Carol Peak, who did not regain their seats, worked for the

"I really applaud Karen McCulloh and Carol Peak for a good effort," he said. "I know they really put their hearts into serving the community.

In the meantime, newly elected commissioners won't officially take office until the April 17 meeting of the commission. Taussig said he would take the next two weeks to prepare, particularly on a focus of keeping city spending under control.

"I hope to rest a little because it's been a pretty aggressive campaign." he Whereas Taussig said he was shooting for a four-year term all the time. Everett, celebrating his 4,094 votes with family and supporters at the Fairfield Inn, said he was pleasantly

"To be honest, I was just shooting to win, just to get on," he said.

Everett, who said he wished the other candidates only the best, said he has a lot of work to do for the April 17 meeting, learning the commission ropes while working his job at the Fairfield Inn.

"There is a significant learning curve for Mr. Taussig and myself," he said. "It's going to be some work, but Manhattan's worth it, hands down."

Everett said he wants to make a point of listening to people's feelings and concerns, both inside and outside of City Hall. He also emphasized a need for careful spending.

"I think one thing I'm going to be passionate about is that the dollars we send to City Hall are spent as responsibly as they are at home," he said.

As the only incumbent re-elected in 2001 with 3,554 votes. Reitz said he sees the new commissioners as Manhattan natives with the community's best interests at heart.

■ Commission approves funds for housing development organization.

By CRISTINA JANNEY

Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission approved $15,000 for the Manhattan Area Housing Partnership from funds administrated by the Social Services Advisory Board on Tuesday.

Members of the board said the $46,367 requested by the partnership was needed for programs that helped needy homeowners.

The commission came to a compromise and allocated $15,000 from board funds and $15,000 from the Capital Improvement Program budget.

The partnership is trying to form a community housing development organization, which could make the city eligible for grant money to improve housing. "I come here with strong concerns that social services money would be used for this endeavor," said

Mary DeLuccie, member of the advisory board. The board has limited its housing assistance to the most needy, she said. The housing programs funded by the board pay for

Napster asks Congress for Web catalog

By D. IAN HOPPER The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Embattled music trading service Napster, with hundreds of its users and pop singers Alanis Morissette and Don Henley in attendance, asked Congress on Tuesday to force publishers to offer their catalogs online.

There is a "failure in the marketplace," Napster interim chief Hank Barry told the Senate Judiciary Committee. He said compulsory licenses would provide consumers more than the smattering of songs now available online and simultaneously assure that publishers and artists are compensated for their work.

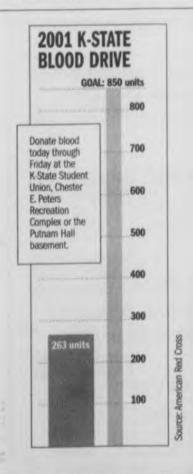

"Congress has repeatedly used such licenses to advance public policy goals in the context of new and frequently inefficient marketplaces," Barry testified.

"Compulsory licenses with clear payment structures have encouraged beneficial new technologies and responded effectively to particular market failures. Music on the radio works because of what is functionally a compulsory license."

Representatives for major music labels and Jack Valenti of the Motion Picture Association of America panned the idea. Hilary Rosen, who represents the music publishers' trade group, called the possibility of compulsory federal licenses a disaster for the music industry.

"Government price-fixing never works." Valenti told the committee.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the committee's senior Democrat, said there is some support in the House and Senate for compulsory online licensing. But Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, seemed cool to the idea, saying compulsory licenses might violate international treaties.

■ International Week at K-State allows celebration of diversity.

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

The Union Courtyard was peacefully taken over by several different countries Tuesday afternoon

An international exhibition featured displays and activities from countries around the world. allowing people at K-State and the Manhattan community to get a look at different cultures.

Each booth had several pictures and treasures from its country. Among the countries represented, there were statues and artwork illustrating time-honored cultural traditions.

The exhibit is part of International Week at K-State. Through Saturday, the International Coordinating Council will have displays, lectures, discussions, foreign films and activities to convey its theme, "By reaching out, we reach around the world."

International Week also celebrates the diversity of K-State students. Currently, 991 international students from about 100 countries help make up the student body. Some of the countries featured at the exhibition included Paraguay, Bangladesh, Brazil, Argentina, Korea and Africa. Alfonso Abente, senior in political science and president of the Paraguay Student Association, said he thinks it is important to promote international cultures.

Abente and Vivian Cubilla, sophomore in management information systems and a member of the Paraguay Student Association. both said he thinks they miss the night life of their country most.

"We don't even go out in Paraguay until 12:00 or 12:30 at night, and the clubs stay open all night," Cubilla said

Cubilla also said she misses her family and friends a great deal, whom she only gets to see The Bangladesh booth had artwork displayed, including nakashi katha, the art of embroidery, a time-honored tradition depicting cultural life in Bangladesh.

Another group represented at the exhibition was the World Friendship Program. It's a nonreligious organization established for American and international women of Manhattan.

Most of its members are wives of men who are graduate students at K-State, along with some faculty wives, Jacque Meisner, World Friendship volunteer, said.

The group meets once a week to meet new people, help people with their English and develop creative skills, as well as learn about different cultures.

organization for about 15 years.

"It brings all the cultures here in Manhattan together," she said. "It's a lot of fun and very emotional when these women leave."

The organization has been in Manhattan for about 30 years. It also has several committees that help with new mothers, transportation and discussion groups.

"One of the first things I noticed about the organization that has changed is the level of education," Wy Johnson, volunteer, said. "At first, many of these women were coming from tiny villages and weren't very educated. Now we have very educated girls."

Postal Service might end deliveries on Saturdays

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Through snow, rain and gloom of night - but maybe not on the weekend.

Battered by slowing business and huge projected losses, the Postal Service announced Tuesday that it will study cutting back to a five-day schedule that would eliminate mail delivery on Saturdays. The agency also will examine how much money can be sayed by consolidating and closing some postal plants and

With rising costs, postal officials say they face a $2 billion to $3 billion loss this fiscal year. After five years in the black, the post office had a $199 million loss last fiscal

The agency's governing board will ask Postal Service management to report their study results within 90 days, said S. David Fineman, the board's vice chairman.

Fineman said the financial savings of going to five-day service could be "substantial."

"It could offset the amount of the loss that we have and we would hope that whatever actions we take will be able to cause us to ask for less of a rate increase," he said,

The price of first class mail went up a penny to 34 cents in January. Postal managers are preparing to apply this summer for another rate increase, to take effect next year.

The study will examine ending Saturday delivery for all mail, except overnight delivery. The study won't consider closing post office windows for other services.

The study of consolidating postal facilities will focus on behind-thescenes operations like mail sorting and delivery and will seek ways to avoid affecting consumers, Fineman said.

Last week, the Postal Service announced that it plans labor, administrative and transportation cuts over the next five years. Deputy Postmaster General John Nolan has said the agency is committed to cutting costs by $2.5 billion by 2003.

And earlier this month, the Postal Service said it was freezing more than 800 new construction and leasing projects across the country.

Ecstasy drug might be cause of 2 teen deaths

MEMPHIS, Tenn - Two teenagers died after buying what police said may have been a bad batch of the hallucinogenic party drug

The 17-year-olds died Sunday and Monday.

The cause of death had not been determined, but Police Director Walter Crews said both had bought the illegal drug.

"What we don't want to happen is when night falls in Memphis, Tenn., this evening, young people in our city go out and purchase some of this compound and find themselves in the same state as these other two," Crews said.

Police said the teen-agers did not know each other and their drug purchases were made separately.

equal tenure and experience at the same company, a disputed Labor Department survey of federal contractors found.

The draft study was released Tuesday by Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, and quickly got tangled in politics. The Labor Department said the report, commissioned by Harkin, has not been issued officially because of accuracy questions that arose during the Clinton administration.

"The methodology and the data that was used in the study was severely flawed," said Stuart Roy, spokesman for Labor Secretary Elaine Chao. Another study is being prepared, he said.

"I am concerned that fruitful conversations about the status of women in the workplace will be misguided by this flawed study," Chao said in a statement.

Harkin released the draft study to mark Equal Pay Day, the theoretical point in the year when women's pay catches up to men's salaries from the year before.

"Anybody in this day and age who doesn't believe that there is a wage gap based on occupational segregation has his or her head. stuck in the sand," Harkin said.

The senator asked the Labor Department almost two years ago to examine federal contractors' wage data and pay gaps. The study was completed in January before President Bush took office, and Harkin has pressed unsuccessfully for its official release.

"The fact is, this administration does not want to release the report because it damages their case, Harkin said.

Crisis management focus of campus team

Kansas State Collegian

A religious director, a campus police officer, a drug and alcohol counselor and other members of the team are ready when tragedy befalls K-State. The group is the crisis management team, and it's active at all times.

"We've been lucky recently in avoiding major tragedy on campus," said Don Fallon, director of religious activities and member of the team. "But it's important to always remain aware of campus activities."

The team was created several years ago when seven suicides occurred within the same year. A diverse group came together in order to help the family and friends of the suicide victims deal with the tragedies, Fallon said.

"It's difficult when someone close to you chooses not to live." he said, "so we try all possible ways to help people through the tragedy.'

Suicide, however, is not the only issue the team deals with. Any tragedy, Fallon said, will move the team to help the people affected.

Along with helping after a tragedy strikes, the team also tries to prevent tragedy as much as possible. "We meet about once a month, no matter what's going on." Fallon said. "Sometimes we discuss other schools' tragedies to learn from them and decide what we would do in their situation. Cooperation between the campus police, student housing. ties and other student-involved groups is key in prevention.

Lt. Richard Herrman of the K-State Police, a member of the team, said cooperation creates success for the group.

"We keep each other informed," Herrman said. "The information we share helps us in planning ahead for emergency situations."

An example of when a police officer is needed is when two students aren't getting along. Herrman said he feels it's every student's right to feel safe.

"Housing has called us over when roommates are really creating problems for each other," Herrman said. "Sometimes an officer just needs to be there to be sure the students remain protected."

A main goal Herrman said he has is to help students understand the importance of making good decisions.

"Having a record, or going to jail and goofing up a college career is a difficult situation," he said. "We try to minimize the chances of that happening.

Another crisis management team member, Fred Newton. director of University Counseling Services, said the team tries its best to remain aware of campus and student activities.

"I'm here to counsel families and friends, but the best thing we can do is avoid tragedy," Newton

The next best thing is to be able to deal with it appropriately when it does happen."

Disabled puppets educate children

Kansas State Collegian

Through puppetry, Jason Coats hopes to educate and entertain at the same time

Coats, senior in elementary education, is the author of scripts for puppet shows about children with disabilities.

Excerpts from his latest show will be performed Saturday at K-State's All-University Open House. The performance will be sponsored by the College of Education and the Council for Exceptional Children, of which Coats is a member.

The skit will involve a group of disabled children who are kept inside during recess. While they are kept inside the school, they begin to blame one another. The point of the skit, Coats said, is that the characters find out that they have more in common than they realized, and that there is no point in blaming someone based on their disability.

Coats' background in puppetry is extensive. He has performed in several shows with StoneLion Pupper Theatre, a Kansas City, Mo.based theater troupe, and attended the summer 2000 convention of the Regional Puppeteers of America, at which Jane Henson, of Henson Muppets, was a delegate.

When audiences see his pupper show and his puppets with learning disabilities. Coats said, he wants for them to walk away with two ideas.

"First. I hope they have a greater understanding of learning disabilities, and I also want people to realize that everyone has weaknesses," he said. "These kids

The complete script won't be finished until later this month, Coats said, his next script will be completed in the fall.

In the meantime, Tiliett said she thinks audiences will enjoy the performance, and that she thinks puppetry is an effective way to educate children.

"Using puppetry is a good way to teach kids things," Tillett said. "It's a great teaching method, and you can use it to teach kids social and life skills."

Bush to address farmers' concerns regarding environmental law

By PHILIP BRASHER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C - The Bush administration will address the concerns of farm interests before making final some rules that the Clinton administration proposed to control runoff from feedlots, Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman said Tuesday.

"Ultimately, there will be some regulation that comes out with a balance that recognizes the important role that agriculture plays," Veneman said.

The rules, which were proposed by the Environmental Protection Agency last December, would expand the number of cattle feedlots and hog farms that would have to get pollution permits and impose new pollution controls on large poultry opera-

EPA, which developed the rules in consultation with the Agriculture Department, said at the time that large farms were "among the greatest threats to our nation's waters."

The American Farm Bureau Federation, the nation's largest farm group, called the regulations unwarranted and said the government should instead use voluntary, incentive-based programs to control runoff. Environmentalists said the EPA didn't go far enough.

Veneman, speaking to a conference of 4-H Club members and leaders, said the government should take a cooperative approach, working with scientists and interest groups, in forming environmental regulations.

"We will certainly be looking at ways that we can make environmental regulation something that is workable with agriculture," she said.

EPA last week extended the public comment period on the regulations for 75 days to July 30.

'Agricultural waste is still a source of water pollution in this country." said EPA spokeswoman Robin Woods. "We're taking a good look at the best approach to resolve this as quickly as possible ... using the voluntary and regulatory approaches."

The regulations would expand controls to some feedlots now exempted from state pollution controls, so that virtually all large livestock operations will have to acquire pollution permits. There also would be new restrictions on discharge of waste from storage pits and lagoons and limits on the amount of manure that can be spread on land owned by livestock opera-

Corporate owners of livestock or poultry would be held responsible for proper waste disposal.

Random Homecoming pairings to improve greek system

Thursday is a big day for K-State's greek system. Fraternities and sororities will break a long-standing tradition in an effort to bring greater unity to the greek system.

This year the governing bodies of the fraternities and sororities voted to make Homecoming pairings a random process, rather than the bidding process that has been used in the past. What this means is that two mutually chosen fraternity pairings will be randomly assigned to a sorority for homecoming activities.

This is a huge step in the right direction for the greek system. The old manner of doing things was getting in the way of the true reason for Homecoming, which is to show our pride for K-State and to welcome our alumni back. In the old system. fraternities and sororities bid on each other on a yearly basis to determine their partnerships. This system was flawed for several reasons.

One of the main flaws with the bidding process

For some houses, it didn't matter how much effort they put into their bidding. They simply weren't going to get the pairing they wanted because their organization wasn't popular enough.

Although there was a threeyear courtesy rule that prevented surprities from doing Homecoming with the same frateruity until the cycle was over, the system still was biased. The larger, more popular fraternities consistently were getting paired with the larger, more popular soronties. This left the members and greater resources. In some cases, it was like David vs. Gollath. Instead of being an event in which everyone had an equalchance of winning, homecoming simply became a power contest between the same group of large and prestigious greek houses. This defeated the purpose of Homecoming, Groups that knew it didn't stand a chance at winning didn't want to take part in homecoming, much less be enthusiastic and spirited

Greece offers high energy, relaxing islands

ATHENS, Greece-

Ancient Athens has found new energy and is running at full speed. Visitors hoping to keep up cannot lie down. Literally. As I stepped off a red-eye flight at 2 a.m., I planned on sleeping for a short while before heading off to explore the sights. However, signs all over the airport displayed a figure lying on the floor, crossed with the red slash and circle. There would be no sleeping in the airport.

Keeping up with Athens was no easy task. Home of nearly 4.5 million people, or one-third of Greece's population, the capital is in a constant state of change. The metropolis once again is preparing for the biggest world sporting event with Greek ties. the Olympic Games.

After playing host in 1896 to the first modern games, Athens is fully prepared for the 2004 spectacle, scheduled for Aug. 13-29, 2004.

The city has just completed two new underground metro lines to help transport the influx of visitors. Smog in the air above might remind some of Los Angeles, as will the noise pollution generated by the swarm of two-stroke mopeds coughing blue haze.

Ancient monuments are slightly less impressive than postcard photos, due to a largescale effort of restoration. The Parthenon still rules the top of the Acropolis, even while it brandishes scaffolding.

The Greek language certainly was confusing. Each word resembled some sort of random homecoming pairing. Once accustomed, omega-psi-chi and the like blended together

Most visitors happen upon Mykonos en route to the island of Delos, birthplace of Apollo and Artemis.

Return of spy plane requested

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - President Bush urged China to immediately release the American crew members of a damaged Navy spy plane Tuesday, suggesting further delay could undermine U.S.-Chinese relations.

"It is time for our servicemen and women to return home. It is time for the Chinese government to return our plane," Bush said at the White House.

Bush said he wanted to give China time to respond to the weekend episode to help prevent the stalemate from escalating into a full-fledged

But, the president said in a statement, such a grace period was quickly running out.

He said he had talked to Army Brig. Gen. Neal Sealock, the U.S. Embassy defense attache in Beijing who participated in a meeting earlier in the day with the 24 crew members -21 men and three women - on China's Hainan island.

"The general tells me they are in good health, they suffered no injuries and they have not been mistreated. I know this is a relief to their loved ones," Bush said.

"The crew members expressed their faith in America, and we have faith in them," the president said. "They're looking forward to coming home and we are looking forward to bringing them home.

Despite the president's appeal, there were few indications China was ready yet to give back either the crew or the equipment-laden aircraft.

Aides said the president wanted to be careful not to inflame the situation further by issuing hard demands or a timetable for the release of the crew. His statement was intended to be firm but patient, aides said.

Manhattan native Pottroff, with the firm Myers, Pottroff and Ball, graduated from K-State in 1975 and attended law school at the University of Kansas on a full ride scholarship.

"The down side to my scholarship was that it was from KU," Pottroff said.

He graduated from law school in 1979 and was interested in returning to Manhattan.

He applied for a job in Manhattan with the late Dan Myers and was hired before finishing his first semester in law school.

He turned down offers from Tulsa, Kansas City and Dallas to be in Manhattan. He said he has never been interested in leaving since.

He is part of the American Trial Lawyers Association, and said he deals with cases mostly outside the state of Kansas.

Pottroff said as a part of his job, he sues railroads for unsafe

He also deals with brain injury cases, which he said some lawyers don't have the intricacy and don't have the preparation that is needed when dealing with these types of cases.

Tamara Puckett, Pottroff's paralegal/trial assistant, has worked with Pottroff for 13 years and said Pottroff is a good lawyer "He is a creative genius when

Not only does he fight cases, but he speaks at international conferences on railroad safety. Pottroff has spoken at conferences in Tennessee, Australia, Canada and Mexico.

One benefit of his job, he said, is the chance to work on an international level, to be recognized around the world and to practice in the town he grew up in.

Another benefit his job offers is independence, he said.

Pottroff said his job gives him the ability to change the world, such as being involved in getting legislation passed for railroad safety improvements.

Puckett said Pottroff has been called one of the best plaintiff attorneys in the country when dealing with railroad safety.

Being able to tell his kids that he is helping make the world a little better when they grow up is something he said he enjoys.

The administrative aspect of running a law firm is one of Pottroff's least favorite aspects of his job.

"Each day in court needs at least one day of preparation before it." Pottroff said.

Bob Pottroff, 1975 alumnus, is a trial lawyer in Manhattan. He specializes in railroad litigation and dealing with accidents that result in brain injury.

One of the most challenging cases Pottroff said he has tried was a case he took on that two other law firms elected not to. He said the case was the most gratifying for him not because of the $10 million verdict awarded to his client, but because he won the case that two other firms thought would be too difficult to try.

The self-proclaimed fierce competitor hates losing especially cases, which doesn't happen often. Pottroff said.

"It has only happened a couple of times, and thank God I don't do it often," he said.

Pottroff said being a plaintiff attorney is difficult because when you win a case your hard work is rewarded.

Rebekah Green practices the shot put at practice Monday afternoon. Green posted NCAA provisional-qualifying marks in the shot put at the meet in Gainesville, Fia., on March 31. She finished second in the women's invitational in shot put with a mark of 51 feet, 7 inches and ninth in discus with a mark of 141 feet, 2 inches.

High school incident leads to sophomore's collegiate success ebekah Green might be one of K-State's leading throwers this outdoor track season, but if not for an incident six years ago, ber hidden talent might have been left undiscovered.

A high school freshman at the Columbus School For Girls in Blacklick, Ohio, Green decided to quit, or "retire," as she preferred to call it, gymnastics, a sport she had participated in for over 12 years.

Thanks to help from her mother. Kathy, that interest became a sudden reality.

Her mother, after making a few phone calls to acquaintances, found a personal coach to teach her daughter the techniques and footwork associated with shot put.

Green said she began her training on a spring Sunday in 1996, and three days later, her luture track career rose to the surface.

That Wednesday, thrust into her first highschool meet, Green boldly stepped up and broke the Ohio State high school record in the shot put with a throw of 43 feet. 11 174

"It was kind of an odd thing that I just stumbled upon. Hey, maybe I could be good at this.' So I worked a little harder, got invited to the Olympic Training Center that next summer and just got into it right away."

Her injury-prone career at K-State has been quite trying at times, Green said.

"Sometimes it's overwhelming, but at the same time, it's something that all good athletes have to deal with," she said. "They always say that the best people always get hurt the worst, but yet, the reason that they get hurt is because they can overcome that.

Green said she's enjoying being healthy. and it seems to be paying off. She already has posted three NCAA provisional-qualifying marks in the shot put this outdoor season.

Meanwhile, she's trying to better her marks in two other events as well - the hammer and discus.

Nevertheless, Green said she doesn't plan on setting any specific goals for herself this season - or any season, for that matter.

"I've never really liked to do that. Basically, the only goal for myself is to get better," she said. "You're going to have bad days, and I've had a couple and gotten really frustrated." Green said Coach Fritz has made her time

Baseball looks for win today

■ Cats take to field after weekend loss to Baylor.

By DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

K-State will look to tweak more than to rebuild this afternoon at Frank Myers Field in its first action since being swept in a three-game set against conference foe Baylor last weekend in Waco, Texas.

"We're maybe two more quality at-bats an inning from breaking out, and I think it'll be infectious once it happens," head coach Mike Clark

"We hustle, we play good defense, we've been on and off with the hitting, but we're getting better. We know our pitchers had a nice stretch of throwing, and we know what they can do. There's nothing to do now but go out there and play to the best of our abilities."

The Cats' best effort wasn't enough last weekend against then-No. 14 Baylor, but Clark said he was satisfied with the way his team competed against the Bears. And, although K-State is sitting at 3-12 in the Big 12 standings heading into today's contest against Oral Roberts, he said his ream's season is not over

'All of the goals that we have, like getting to Bricktown and having a winning season, are still there for us. If we go out and win, we'll go to Bricktown," Clark said.

"I told them today, "We haven't played our best ball. We have that to look forward to, so we have to make sure that our heads are straight so that when this streak happens, we take advantage of it."

Josh Cavender, who has been an anchor for the Cats at designated hitter so far this season, said the team's early season struggles are hard to look past, but not because the team isn't trying.

"The record is frustrating," he said, "but the baseball gods haven't been looking over us larely We need to put together a couple of good

"Our goals are still there. We just need to bring quality pitching and hitting together now. But Clark's optimistic outlook for the rest of the season shouldn't be mistaken for contentment. "We need to put this thing together and get a good streak of nine out of 11 or 15 out of 18 or something like that," he said. "After Oklahoma State, we're hasically home for the rest of the season in the friendly confines of Frank Myers Field, and when we get a stretch and that comfort level, I think we'll have a pretty good ball club."

But today's opponent will be no pushover for the Cats. The Golden Eagles enter the 3 p.m. game as winners of their last four, including 20-1 and 16-1 wins over Mid-Continent conference rival Oakland on March 3L

They're a good team," Clark said. "With their conference setup, they're going to be in a regional every year. They don't really get tested that much, so they look at the non-league games as their big games.

"It'll be a good test for us because they're a very athletic ball club. They've got guys who can run and hit, so we'll have to play well."

Athleticism, competitiveness of racewalking should not be forgotten Sports fans, I'm about to enlighten you.

But before I do, I want to ensure you that, although my means of transportation, due to a certain run-in with the law, soon will be reduced to a pair of legs that sees its most exercise on the intramural softball field, I will survive.

That said, I'm willing to bet my driver's license that you, as a true aficionado, refuse to accept walking as a part of your sports realm. This is understandable, given that as students on a college campus that is home to more squirrels than open parking spaces on any given day, we many times are forced to walk to class when a parking garage seems like so much more of an attractive solution to the problem.

Even I sometimes have asked, "Why?" on those blustery winter days when it seems like any normal person could understand why parking should be issue numero uno on any policy agenda regarding campus renovation.

But have you ever thought of those otherwise inconvenient jaunts as an opportunity?

Whether conditions include subzero temperatures and ice-slicked walkways or humidity levels that rival only Bobby Knight's hotheaded tirades, it's not just we college students out there trekking the pavement in hopes of something better. There's medals to be won for this kind of That's right — Olympic medals! Ever get that feeling that sometimes folks can be just a bit too competitive?

I never really thought about it before, but the prospect of my walking or swallowing my pride and asking for a ride come April 15 conjured up thoughts of racewalking as a sport.

I'd always pictured myself as more of a baseball guy, stealing the glory by coming through with a clutch hit to save the season, but now I think I have a newfound appreciation for the finer things in life. You know, according to the United States Racewalking Association, racewalking is more than walking and better than running, it's the hip way to

I do realize, of course, that all athletes train hard and work constantly to achieve their dreams of stardom and respect among their peers and fans. The sports world can be rough at times, and even racewalking, I imagine, has its moments of high suspense and drama.

Imagine with me a cold morning outside your apartment. As you lace up your Pumas and finish stretching the hamstrings, the thought that someone, somewhere, is working harder than you at, of all things, walking, starts you on your way. That thought alone weeds out some 'wannabe' racewalkers, but for the rest of us ... ahem. them, it's enough to send fear throughout their entire body.

Suddenly, you pick up the pace, your strides become longer and your fists are pumping faster than that drunk outside the after-hours party you went to last Friday night.

Not too fast, though. If you want to go for the gold in 2004, or even compete on the same level with professional walkers like Tim Seamen, you can't look like an idiot. Racewalking is a dying art, so don't kill it off by looking like a rookie even if you are one.

Nope, racewalkers definitely do not look goofy. They don't seem to be wasting their time either.

So, no matter how much it looks like a racewalker is trying to get home in time to catch the last 15 or so minutes of "Toughman," just slow down enough to smile and say, "I feel you man. Good luck and keep walking. We'll be watching for

You just might make a racewalker's day, and if you're lucky, you might even score an autographed sweatband.

Environment tops concerns

By JOHN HEILPRIN

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. —
Frustrated European officials expressed skepticism Tuesday that the Bush administration would propose anything new on global warming but said other industrial countries planned to pursue a treaty on climate change.

"We are very much prepared to go on ..., without the United States. We cannot allow one country to kill this," said Kjell Larsson. Sweden's environment minister.

Larsson and Margot Wallstroem, the EU's environment commissioner, had come to Washington with high expectations for their meetings Tuesday with President Bush's administration officials and several Democratic senators.

Instead, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator
Christie Whitman told the Europeans that a treaty negotiated in Kyoto, Japan, in 1997 is unfair to the United States. She pledged U.S. cooperation in seeking technologies and incentives to address climate change.

"We were hoping to be able to persuade the United States to come back into the Kyoto protocol," Wallstroem said. "There is a lot of frustration. ... Without going to threats, I would say this would affect international cooperation."

Whitman said the Bush Cabinet is reviewing U.S. policies to determine how to approach concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

"I emphasized to members of the European community that I continue to be as optimistic as the president that, working constructively with our friends and allies through international processes, we can develop technologies, marketbased incentives and other innovative approaches to global climate change," Whitman said.

Asked whether the EU is open to Bush taking a new tack on the issue of global warming, Larsson said that, after a decade of work on the problem, "I don't think there will be a fresh approach" from the United

Bush last month sparked an international outcry by reversing a campaign promise to treat carbon dioxide from power plants as a pollutant and source of global warming. He said the Kyoto accord's mandatory cuts on carbon dioxide emissions and short timetable are no longer acceptable to the United States.

The administration said it instead will seek an alternative that would include poorer, underdeveloped countries now exempt from treaty commitments. Whitman reiterated that the Kyoto accord "is unfair to the United States and to other industrialized nations because it exempts 80 percent of the world from compliance."

Larsson and Wallstroem emphasized the U.S. must bear responsibility for a quarter of the world's greenhouse gas emissions.

The Europeans met earlier with U.S. environmental groups.

No industrial country has yet ratified the Kyoto treaty. An effort last November at The Hague, Netherlands, to come up with a plan for implementing the accord collapsed in a disagreement between the United States and Germany over trading pollution credits.

Education topic of Legislature

By JOHN MILBURN

The Associated Press

TOPEKA — When it comes to school finance, legislators have received an education this session.

Including declining enrollments, teacher shortages, accountability, no issue has been overlooked in the state's $2.26 billion investment.

Superintendents, teacher associations and school board groups all say there are no problems in elementary and secondary schools that a few hundred million dollars would not fix.

But skepticism about the value of putting millions of additional dollars into public schools has taken root. Conservatives are the most vocal, but they're not alone.

Both the House and Senate were scheduled to debate rival school finance proposals Wednesday.

Many education officials see few alternatives, other than Gov. Bill Graves' $112 million plan or the Senate Education Committee's package.

Craig Grant, speaking for the Kansas School Finance Coalition, called Graves' proposal "the best hope available for improving the quality of Kansas public education." School districts and education groups — Grant lobbies for the Kansas-National Education Association teachers' union — formed the coalition to lobby legis-

The coalition is not convinced that increasing sales and motor fuels taxes, as Graves has proposed, is the best way to raise money, but its members do feel the governor's package addresses the most pressing education needs.

Graves traveled the state touting his plan, while a Johnson County group has mounted a grass-roots campaign to drum up support.

During debate, a lot is made of the base state aid per pupil, which was set at $3,600 in 1992 when the current school finance law was enacted. It is $3,820 for the 2000-01 school year, but with all the formula's provisions factored in, the average spending is more than $7,000 per student.

Education advocates point to the finance formula as both the cause and cure. What the state does not cover, districts often make up with local property taxes, up to 25 percent extra.

Mark Tallman, a lobbyist for the Kansas Association of School Boards, noted that the state has reduced its own property tax levy for schools, while "local school boards have been forced to increase unequal local property tax levies to compensate."

But education groups have had a tough sell.

As many as 50 legislators are members of the Kansas Legislative Education and Research Inc., or KLEAR. The conservative think tank is known for opposing tax increases and favoring smaller state government.

KLEAR not taken a position on the school finance plans but members were likely to vote against them, executive director John Potter said.

"National statistics show that throwing money at schools is not going to solve the problems," Potter said.

The question is what taxpayers get for their investment, Potter

A group must have a paid staff member to form a community housing development organization, according to Department of Housing and Urban Development regulations.

Smith said the board hoped the new organization would be in a position to apply for enough grant money for programs in the community and to fund the organization's staff.

The housing group was one of six recommendations that came from a city housing study. Mayor Karen McCulloh said the new housing organization would allow the city to develop programs that could help people before they needed social services.

"They have got to get the paid staff person going with the CDHO and see what they can do," she said.

Commissioner Bruce Snead also supported the funding.

Commissioner Ed Klimek supported the housing organization, but he said he was concerned about allocating money from the social services board budget. He supported Reitz said this race was more taxing than the last one four years ago, but he said he had the chance to meet more voters one-on-one. Reitz also said he wants to pursue restoration of the Union Pacific depot as a city project.

David Johnson came in fourth place with 2,531 votes and could not be reached for comment. Carol Peak, who came in sixth with 560 votes and withdrew from the race in late March. declined comment.

McCulloh, who was fifth with 2,012 votes, said it was a disappointment not to make it back onto the commission, but the climate of antiincumbency and cost-cutting made a difference.

New commissioners, she said, might find that cutting fat from local government is easier said than done. However, McCulloh's final action of the Tuesday night meeting was to return a controversial streetlight vs. roundabout issue on the intersection of Kimball and College avenues to the commission for the April 17 meeting.

The original decision of the commission was to install the more expensive streetlight, and McCulloh said many citizens have expressed regret since then.

"I wanted to give (the new commission) their first night an opportunity to save the city half a million dollars and serve the public demand," she said.

After her term ends, McCulloh said she will have more time to travel in her job as development officer of Hale Library and perhaps even take her first summer vacation in eight years. She said she wishes the commission as a whole well.

"It will be in very good hands with Bruce," she said.

According to city tradition, Commissioner Bruce Snead will take over as the next mayor at the April 17

COMEDIAN FOR LIFE

UPC brings longtime performer to Union Station on Thursday

By CHELSEA SCHMIDT

Kansas State Collegian

Making people laugh is what comedian Scott main stage.

"I like being on stage and making a room full of people have a good time," Faulconbridge said. "It's not a bad way to make a living.

K-State will get a taste of his humor when he makes a stop at Union Station at 8 p.m. Thursday.

Faulconbridge started doing comedy when he was a student at McGill University in Montreal. He then became a member of On The Spot Players, a critically. acclaimed improv troupe in Canada.

"I started doing improv at the university," he said. "After that, I was in a troupe and I saw standup. It all just snowballed from there."

Faulconbridge now finds time to visit 15 to 30 universities each year.

Citing Steve Martin as one of his favorite comedians, Faulconbridge said he focuses on offheat humor in his acts.

"I just try to do my own thing," he said. Faulconbridge's performance is sponsored by the

Kit Strecker, sophomore in radio and television communications and chair of Eclectic Entertainment. said the decision to bring in Faulconbridge was not a difficult one

Her committee of six chooses the people they bring in by listening to demo tapes at a table with a bell.

"Anyone can ring the bell if they get bored and we move on to the next one," she said. "We figure if somebody rings a bell then someone won't enjoy the

While listening to Faulconbridge's tape, Strecker said it seemed that the entire committee enjoyed what

The committee is almost completely college students," she said. "The fact that nobody rang the bell shows we enjoyed the subjects he talked about."

Eclectic Entertainment coordinates events its members feel will be enjoyable to college students. Strecker said this is the third time they've brought in a comedian this semester, and they also hope to bring some musical events.

"Our only limitation is our venue," Strecker said. The Union doesn't have a really good music place."

Nevertheless, Strecker said she predicts a good show Thursday night. "He doesn't seem like he's an offensive comedian," she said. "He just seems more interesting than your average comedian.

Jessica Wisneski, sophomore in music composition. said she looks forward to seeing Faulconbridge perform.

"He's a younger comedian who does a lot more jokes geared toward the college level," she said. "I have two tests that day, and I would like to chill out after taking them. Seeing a comedian is a pretty good way to

Folk, blues, rock combine in musician's work

By JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

Singer and songwriter Natalie Cox will perform an acoustic set at noon today in the Union Courtyard.

Accompanied by her acoustic guitar, Cox said she blends folk, blues and rock into her personal style. She has released two albums, "It's a Soul Thing" and "Bear Some Soul," and she plans on releasing a third album this summer. The Collegian staff recently spoke with Cox about her music, and here is what she had

Q: How did you get started with

Natalie Cox: Both of my grandmothers were planists and they started teaching me how to play when I was three years old. Q: When involved in the songwriting process, do you have a personal ritual?

NC: Sometimes I do and it involves lighted candles and a sort of mania and phenomenon where the music overtakes me. It seems to come in phases and when it happens I'm chronically five minutes late every-

Q: Is there any trigger to that phenomenon?

NC: If I could figure that out I'd do it more often. Actually, it usually comes after hearing lots of negativity, especially when I'm hearing a lot about some political crap or poor environmental practices. I feel a pulling to do my little part in this world.

Q: So are your songs politically motivated?

NC: Several songs are inspired by environmental issues, like "Revealations," "Totanka," and "This Mountain." Through music, I'm also something of an animal rights activist.

I'm a musician first, that's just one aspect of my work. I also love the blues and I've been influenced by blues musicians like Betsy Smith and Mary Lou Wallace. The style helps my improvisation and gives the music greater depth of voice with more soul. It makes it more realistic 'cause no one is happy all the time.

Q: What was your first love in music?

NC. That would probably be with my grandma. She would have us sing and dance to stuff from the '30s like "Bushel and a Peck" and children's songs like "Little Bunny Fufu." She presented it with so much love.

Q: What do you hope your audience gains from seeing your performance?

NC: I want the audience to feel inspired, and feel better when they leave. I hope I trigger some of their own creativity because everyone can be creative in some way.

Day of Silence addresses sexuality issues

Kansas State Collegian

Members of the Queer Straight Alliance remained silent Wednesday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in an effort to raise awareness of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender issues as part of a their Day of Silence Project.

If someone tried to interact with participating members, they handed the person a paper card explaining the event and their reasons for remaining silent.

Members of the organization are silenced for many reasons, said Sarah Bailey, president of QSA and senior in speech communications.

She said people who cannot be open to who they are can be silenced from a fear of losing their job, children or friends and family

"They feel those costs are much heavier than the benefits of being out and open," Bailey said. "Those are not just fears they have created. Those are legitimate fears people in the queer community have to

She said the Day of Silence Project is a chance to bring about these issues and make people think of the difficulties that others have to face in their daily lives.

Ryan Gove, graduate student in college student personnel and assistant residence life coordinator for Ford Hall, is the coordinator of the event. This is his third year participating in the project.

This project is something I enjoy doing because it is not out there, in-your-face activism, but it still gets the same point across," Gove said.

People are being silenced every day because of the general societal belief that homosexuality is wrong, he said. This event passively displays members of the alliance and its allies to campus, offering assistance to students who are thinking of coming out, he said.

"Because people who are homosexual are not always visible on a large campus like K-State, individuals who are questioning their sexuality may not be open about it because they don't know where their support network is." Gove said. "However, an event like the Day of Silence Project sheds some light on who those supporters are."

One of the resident assistants Gove supervises, Regina Muñoz, Junior in elementary education, said she thinks it would be uncomfortable working with him if he was silenced everyday. If he was unable to be open with his staff about his sexuality and life choices, she said, it would be a very tense working environ-

"It is a part of who he is." Muñoz said. "If he can't share his differences and his uniqueness with us, as a staff, we would be saying we didn't value them.

OSA executive board members decided not to advertise the event on campus. Bailey said group members and other supporters were informed about the event through a mass e-mail.

She said she was wary of heavily publicizing the event because she expected some negative responses. She said the organization does not feel very supported by campus.

"Part of me said, 'I didn't really want to read the Campus Fourum the day before," she said. "I didn't think the group needed the negative press, and we didn't need the negativity going into an event promoting awareness.

This is K-State's first time participating in the event. Bailey said even though this is her last year at K-State, she hopes the National Day of Silence Project becomes a tradition.

"It's very simple to do if it's done by enough people," she said. "Hopefully next year we can get some more activities and ironically bring in a speaker to help raise even more awareness."

Rickett Walking beside a combine bagging different varieties of wheat during the summer is just one of Kimberly Platt's, freshman in accounting, tasks. Platt works for at the K-State greenhouses and says her favorite part of the job is planting wheat, watching It grow and knowing that it's going toward Important research. Below: Platt emasculates wheat Wednesday after-

GREAKOU

Agronomy research works toward better wheat

By JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

imberly Platt, freshman in accounting, is on the ground level of wheat research.

Platt, who works in K-State greenhouses, nelps develop a higher quality of wheat for the agronomy department.

"It is neat because once we develop a good wheat, we are able to name it and allowed to release it," she said. "My part of the job is one of the first steps, so it is exciting to know I helped start the process."

Platt works with emasculating, or sterilizing, the wheat. During emasculation, the male reproductive parts are taken out so once the plants reach maturity, they can't reproduce, she said.

"This allows us to cross breed them with another type to produce a higher quality of wheat," Platt said. "Right now we are focusing on converting red wheat into hard-white wheat. It makes a better bread."

Besides emasculating. Platt takes care of the greenhouses and plants seeds.

"Planting seeds is one of my favorite part of my job." she said. "It is nice seeing the wheat I planted grow. And knowing that it is going towards important research gives me a sense of satisfaction." During the summer, Platt's job requires her to work outside with the K-State harvest crew.

The summer is a lot of physical work because we are out on the field the majority of the day harvesting the wheat," she said. "It is hot and really dirty."

Plan walks beside the combine and bags the different variety of wheat for research purposes.

"We have 12 plots that each have a different type of wheat planted in them," she said. "I label each bag, and then we use that wheat to help with the cross-breeding research.

Platt also does field and moisture test during the summer.

"It's all aimed towards developing a higher quality of crop," she said.

"Everything we do has a purpose, and each person has a certain job." The Department of Agronomy typically hires four to six graduate students and three to five student helpers for the greenhouse work, Larry Patton, agriculture technician.

"It takes that many to run our department efficiently," Patton said. "Kimberly is a big part of that. She does a great job, and we really couldn't ask for anyone better. She is really dedicated to her job." Although Platt is an accounting major, she said she has developed an interest in agronomy.

"I really like my job," she said.

"The more I work, the more interest I have in it. It has become a hobby that I really enjoy. It is a relaxing way to escape the real world."

Company donates cell phones to designated-driver programs

By LYNN TREVINO

Kansas State Collegian

A local business is showing its concern for students' salety by contributing to designated-driver programs.

Manhattan's Sprint PCS has been helping greek houses on campus improve their designated driver programs. The company is providing cellular phones and plans at no or reduced cost for 10 fraternities and sororities to advance their DD programs.

"We all wanted to have cell phones for our DDs, so we started looking around Manhattan for the cheapest plan. I went to Sprint PCS and told them what we were looking for, and they told me about the program," said Jess Williamson, vice president of Sigma Nu Fraternity.

Sprint PCS sales representative Shawn Verstraet said one cellular phone was donated to each of the houses by Sprint PCS as a demo phone, which is serviced by company minutes.

"As long as they do not abuse the minutes on the phone, they can use it at no cost," Verstraet said.

However, if the houses chose to include a second phone, Verstraet said a monthly plan was offered at a reduced price.

Former Alpha Delta Pi President Mary Bosco said the addition of cell phones to the DD system has allowed the program to service more people. Calls can be received while DDs are at the houses as well as while they are on runs to pick up other people.

Unlike the other greek houses that have participated in the program, Sprint PCS has donated two cellular phones to the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity after a fire damaged the house earlier this semester. "They don't pay anything due to the fact they had a tragedy and we were trying to help them out," Verstraet said.

Jordan Smith, technology and risk management chair for Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, said Sprint PCS has provided the house with free service and has been very helpful about the situation.

"Sprint PCS is doing an excellent job showing that they do care." Smith said.

The fraternities and sororities being serviced by Spring PCS will have the option to use the cellular phones until the end of the semester or continue the plan through next

Cabinet selection to begin

By JESSICA PITTS Kansas State Collegian

Newly-installed Student Body President Kyle Barker and Student Body Vice President Brandon Kauffman are beginning their term by building their Cabinet at Thursday's Student Senate

Student Senate chair, vice chair, representative to Faculty Senate and intern coordinator will be elected during the meeting. Nominations for Senate chair include Matt Wolters, junior in agriculture; Ben Hopper, senior in agricultural communications and journalism, and Danny Callahan, junior in biology. "Each candidate will have the opportunity to give a short speech about what they want to accomplish as the Senate chair." Barker said, 'and then the senate body will vote."

After the chair is elected, nominations will be taken for the remaining positions. Both Barker and Kauffman said they are excited to establish the people they will be working with.

"We are pretty excited to finally start getting settled in," Kauffman said. "We still have to wait for some more applications to come in by Friday to finish our rabines, but Thursday's meeting will be a good beginning."

Senate also plans to introduce their first resolution calling for support of a tax credit for student loan relief.

The support is for Kansas Senate Bill 516 and House of Representatives Bill 1072 that would provide graduates with a tax credit up to $1,500 per year for interest on student loans at and over $20,000.

This would dramatically help graduates who are paying off their student loans," Barker said. "A lot of students are struggling, and this provides a more logical way for graduates to pay off the loans without added interest.

Gary A. Wysong, 39, was arrested on an obscenity charge at the electronics department of a Meijer store in Middleton, Ohio, in January. According to police. Wysong popped his own hard-core pornography tape into one of the VCRs on sale and watched it for about five minutes before security officers, seeing that it was making other customers nervous, asked him to stop. Officers detained him for police when he ignored their request.

Ambassador addresses change in Latin America

Diego Abente-Brun, Paraguayan ambassador to the Organization of American States, spoke on campus Monday about the past and future of Latin America and the challenges it faces.

Scott Tollefson, director of the masters program in political science and assistant professor. said Abente-Brun's presentation focused on where Latin America. has been and what it hopes to do in the future. The former, he said, was the dominant part of the speech and probably the most important

"His presentation reflected the changes in thinking in Latin. America," Tollefson said, "Some of his ideas are ones that you definitely wouldn't have heard 10 or 15 years ago. There have been many changes in thought and his presentation reflected that.

Karen Gaffin, Sigma lota Rho president, said it is important that everyone learn about the international community, particularly Latin America. Sigma Iota Rho was one of the sponsors of the presen-

"Latin America is our neighbor. We should all understand the issues and stereotypes of the past," Gallin. said. "They aren't the same as they used to be. That's one thing that was discussed."

The presentation offered attendants a different perspective on international relationships. Tollefson said.

"It's good to get a distinct perspective on these issues," Tollefson said. "Especially someone such as Abente-Brun, who holds such a position in Latin America."

Tollefson said it is rare that someone of Abente-Brun's intellect is able to come onto campus and discuss the type of information he presented.

"His speech was refreshing, bold and very intelligent," Tollefson said. - April Middleton

Disease poses no threat to travelers in Europe

WASHINGTON, D.C. Travelers to Europe are at little risk of catching mad-cow disease, given the precautions that have been put in place and the relatively few illnesses reported, U.S. health experts said Wednesday.

"The danger of driving to the airport is greater than eating meat in Europe," said Richard Johnson. a special adviser to the National Institutes of Health on mad-cow and related diseases.

Mad-cow, or bovine spongiform encephalopathy, is linked to a human brain-wasting disease that has killed some 80 Europeans since the mid-1990s, mostly in Britain. Cases have been reported in France, Portugal, Germany, Spain and Ireland.

Britain has implemented a number of controls on animal feed and mealpacking in an effort to eradicate the disease.

"It's much safer now to eat beef in Britain, although I've eaten beef in Britain throughout this thing," Johnson told the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee.

There has never been a confirmed case of mad-cow disease in the United States, and it is unlikely to reach this country because of restrictions on livestock and meat imports, said government officials and animal experts.

"The likelihood of BSE is very low. It is not zero," said William Hueston, a mad-cow expert at the Virginia-Maryland Regional College of Veterinary Medicine.

Foot-and-mouth disease, which is harmless to humans, is spread far more easily than mad-cow disease. - The Associated Press

5 Israeli soldiers killed in accident near Hebron

JERUSALEM - An armored personnel carrier overturned in the West Bank on Wednesday, killing five soldiers in one of the worst accidents involving Israeli ground forces in recent years.

The five Israeli soldiers, all between the ages of 18 and 20, were riding on top of the vehicle and were crushed, the military said. The driver was seriously injured.

The military described the crash, in which the vehicle flipped over several times near the city of Hebron, as an accident. The vehicle was to have taken part in security for a visit to the area by Defense Minister Binyamin Ben-Eliezer.

A witness said the vehicle was traveling at high speed at the time of the crash. The driver apparently lost control and the vehicle left the road. rolled down a hill and flipped over.

Military ambulances and helicopters raced to the scene. Four soldiers died at the scene and one died en route to the hospital,

K-State professor of kinesiology studies mechanics of baseball bats

By KRISTEN DYMACEK Kansas State Collegian

A passion for softball has turned into 20 years of research for Larry Noble.

Noble, professor of kinesiology, has spent countless hours trying to perfect the design of metal baseball and softball bats.

"I played softball at a high level of competition, and I really loved it," he said. "It really filled Still, Noble said he wanted to improve his game, so he started to take a closer look at the bat.

"I wanted to get an edge, just like anybody else," he said. "I decided I was going to study and learn about it as much as I could.

When he started his research, Noble studied the rigid mechanics of the metal bat.

"When we started studying this 20 years ago, nobody knew anything about it," he said. "Few people were studying it."

With the help of former K-State physics professor John Eck, Noble researched the center of percussion, or the sweet spot, of the bat.

He said the center of percussion is the area of the bat where there are the fewest vibrations and least impact shock when the

Noble's work on the center of percussion led to a patent, which helped with the design of a new

"When people started using the bat, while effective, they didn't like it," he said. "They complained about the vibrations."

So Noble teamed up with Hugh Walker, a former mechanical engineer professor, and spent several years studying bat

"When we started doing this, we thought we'd improve the bat," he said. "We began to study what was wrong and began to learn more about the properties of the bat."

His studies led to the discovery of the springboard effect. He said that when it is swung, a bat will bend back and forth, very similar to the way a diving board bends. What makes the bat bend is the force behind the swing

"It's the human being that controls the way the bat will bend and unbend when swinging," Noble said

He also has studied the effect the flexibility of bats has on hitting performances.

"A company wanted us to do a study on flexible bats," Noble said. "We found out they work well for slow-pitch, that people really like them. There's now a whole line of bats on the market that will do that."

Depending on the type of research. Noble said he has spent as much as 50 hours a week working on bat design studies.

"As far as data collection, we would be out there every day. including Saturday and Sunday, until it was done," he said.

When he goes out to the field. some of the equipment Noble uses includes a computer, a radar gun and a video camera.

"We use a whole team of people to do a study," he said. Noble's research has included work with companies such at Louisville Slugger and Easton, He has traveled to several countries. speaking about his research at symposiums. His ideas also have been featured on ESPN.

Kasee Hildenbrand, graduate student in kinesiology, said Noble's success comes from his dedication and enthusiasm about his research

"The man pretty much totally loves bats," Hildenbrand said. "He knows more about the recoil of bats then anybody I've talked Noble said he enjoys his field of research.

"I'm lucky. I've been able to follow my interest and what I love and make a contribution.

Discovery comes in baby steps," Noble said. "I've made a couple of baby steps."

Library volunteers, staff prepare for weekend sale

A lifetime hobby has turned into a volunteer service for two Manhattan residents.

Wandean Rivers and Pam Stokes, co-chairs of the Manhattan Library Association Book Sale, both volunteered to organize the sale because of their love for books.

"Organizing the book sale comes natural to me," Rivers said. "I have enjoyed going to the library since I was a little girl. It is like my refuge my way of getting away without getting away."

For Stokes, the book sale also provides enjoyment.

"The sale is a neat way to do something I enjoy," she said. "We have a lot of fun organizing the books and meeting the people that come to the sale.

The work for the sale is year round, Rivers said.

"We are constantly getting books into the library for the sale," she said. "We have volunteer sorters that help a lot in the organizing. There is also advertising and setup for the sale that take a significant amount of

The job becomes more time consuming the week before the sale, Stokes said.

"It becomes more stressful because there are so many last minute things to do," she said, "but it is something we both enjoy doing, so it isn't always difficult. We make it enjoyable."

All proceeds from the sale. which starts Friday with a members-only preview night, runs through Sunday and will benefit the Manhattan Public Library.

"The money will help support current facilities and help to enhance other services," said Terri Belin, administrative assis> tant for the library. "The sale is an important part of the library's programming. Without it, we would have strict budget restrictions."

Stokes said they don't have a specific goal for the sale, but she said past sales have brought in a significant amount of money.

"We are like the fairy god mothers of the library," Stokes said. "They come to us with their wishes, and we try to fulfill them.

Belin said she is thankful to the co-chairs because of their dedication to the sale.

"Without them, this would not happen," she said. "Wandean and Pam are very committed to making the sale as successful as possible. They really are the driving force."

Stokes said most of her motivation comes from seeing the expressions of the buyers.

"They get really excited when they find certain books," she said. "There are some real treasures that can be found during the sale."

Rivers said they encourage people of all ages to take advantage of the sale.

"The books are cheap, but they are very valuable," she said. "There is always a wide variety and something for everyone. It is a joy to see people come in and get excited because they have found their own little treasure."

A Motel 6 is much cheaper to stay at than a Marriott. Yet it cost me just as much to have a poor professor as it does to have a good professor.

There are 24 American troops that are basically being held hostage in China right now and the Collegian has that on the third page. Great job, Collegian,

MTV hypocritical in turning down PETA ad

Like a

There are a few games I call "Tom Clancy Bowls."

I was delighted to find out my beloved San Diego Chargers made it to the Super Bowl in Clancy's "Sum of All Fears" (soon being mutilated and bastardized for the silver screen, but that's a different spleen to vent), only to find out that during the game against the Minnesota Vikings, a nuclear weapon destroys both teams and the stadium.

Whenever there's a competition where I wish both teams could lose, where I wish victory could be avoided and just have mutually assured destruction, that's a Clancy Bowl.

Raiders-Broncos game. Or a Mike Tyson-Jerry Jones bout. Or Bill Romanowski vs. O.J. Simpson. Or Bobby Knight vs. a concrete abutment. Or, now, MTV vs. People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. The reason? Horny cats. First, the weigh-in. First, on your right (for once), MTV, a network which was once a true synthesis of "music" and "television," which has mutated into a marketing channel, becoming a delivery device for corporate America to burn information into the retinas of America's doe-eyed youth and anyone vainly struggling to find a music video. I've seen more videos on C-SPAN than MTV. MTV is chiefly comprised of advertisements, sexuality, moronic stunts of self-degradement and Carson Daly standing up and addressing the camera with the energy and charisma of a road-killed

And in the left corner, PETA, one year older than MTV and taking on many of the same corporations the once-music channel courts. PETA's central philosophy is that animals should not be eaten, worn, experimented upon or used for entertainment (if only MTV applied these standards to people). And like its nowopponent, PETA doesn't believe in doing things subtly - activism, loud and boisterous, is its way, Ingrid Newkirk, PETA president, said she hopes foot-andmouth disease makes its way to American shores, welcoming the economic harm it would wreak on farmers and food producers. Yep, every time I inch toward giving PETA an ounce of credit, whoops, they step in and prevent it like a railroad

OK. Sure, I liked "Aeon Flux" and I appreciate and understand the basic philosophy of sparing animals unnecessary pain - but in my bloodshot eyes, both of these groups deserve an goalie stick with its name on it and I've got Marty McSorely on speed-dial.

So imagine my glee when MTV refused to run PETA's new TV ad depicting feline puppets engaging in, well, hot hot tabby-on-tabby

It's a surprisingly well-done ad, if a little ... attention-getting (our editor merely covered her mouth and whimpered "Oh, my God, that's not right" when she saw it, but then, she has that reaction when she gets a remainder during long division). It's a public service ad urging people to have their pets fixed, lest we get swamped in the little boogers. But it had been rejected by several networks, including the Discovery Channel. Well, they are quasirealistic puppets doing quite natural things in a very unnatural wayone part "Wild Kingdom," one part "Wild Things" - the Discovery Channel felt they were too much like people. (It also got rejected from Fox affiliates for airing during the "Temptation Island" finale and if ever there was a show which suited animals copulating furiously in heat....) Enter MTV. Home of either (a) scantily-clad female singers flaunting their sexuality at the camera (b) male singers objectifying scantily-clad female dancers in front of the camera or (c) the oft-repeated "Sex in the '90s" series of shallow-mentaries (which have, er, what to do with music?), MTV's stance on the PETA ad? They don't allow the depic tion" (their word).

Do you hear that? That sound? That's me laughing in my head. It's a sad sound of a broken man.

Y'know what? You make the call. Education quality suffers from budget cuts Something is terribly wrong here. It is griped about by students and professors alike.

There are not enough classes, nor are there enough professors to go around. Some might call it a lack of funding, due to this we have a shortage of professors, thus limited classes.

The optimist might call this situation an obstacle to overcome. However, you've caught me having a bad year so I am going to be a little less politically correct about this and call it what it is ... bullshit. Plain and simple.

Being put on a wait-list or experiencing dilemmas with closed classes is part of the college experience. But when it is affecting so many departments, thus so many students, there is a problem.

As of noon Tuesday, 399 classes were closed. Yet there are so many students, such as those who transfer, who have not been able to enroll yet.

In the College of Arts and Sciences, there are 15 closed classes in the A.Q.

Miller School of Journalism, the waiting list is around 10 deep for each.

The College of Business Administration could not give me an answer on how many closed classes they have, but did say it is a continuous problem.

According to the closed class list on www.ksu.edu, as of 4 p.m. Tuesday, the Department of Mathematics has 77 of their available class times

There are some departments that are not expecting any major problems. The College of Education said there are only a few core classes that will most likely be full.

A dean from the College of Engineering said he expects there to be few problems experienced by students in terms of full classes, however, there might end up being a problem in regards to lack of professors due to the budget cuts.

The budget cuts resulted in a hiring freeze, where professors have not been fired, but if they resign or retire their positions will not be filled. Thus, some courses have to be canceled due to lack of professors.

When KU received similar budget cuts, they decided to cut some of their men's sports. Athletics are an important part of college life, but academics should always be the top priority. It is no secret that enrollment has increased since the success of the football team. As much as I enjoy watching the football team win and enjoy the excitement of some of the basketball games, I did not come to K-State only to paint my face purple and scream at the top of my lungs. I came here to learn.

Students don't need a lot of the extras that K-State provides. It is not a necessity that a university has a fountain that reminds everyone of a urinal. Nor is it a necessity to have the grounds crew watering the sidewalks, or using leaf blowers. Honestly, when it comes down to it which is more important, the exterior of a campus or the interior? And when I say interior I am referring to classes being open.

Students need more professors, more times available for classes and definitely more classes offered more than once a year. I am not paying this much money to continuously be put on a wait list. I would be willing, within reason, to pay more more to get more. Education is the key that will unlock so many doors and bring reality to dreams. But right now the priority of students seems to be on a never ending wait-list.

Team aims to improve blue LEDs

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

Guitarist B.B. King once sang that every day he has the blues. For about six years, scientists trying to make a better light have been able to say the same.

Light-emitting diodes, or LEDs, have been developed since the 1970s, but a primary drawback, is they only can be made cheaply to project red and green.

A 1992 breakthrough by Japanese scientists, however, created a blue LED, and groups like K-State's GaN group at the Department of Physics have been working to make the most of it.

The GaN group, led by husband/wife team professor Hongxing Jiang and associate professor Jingyu Lin, have been following the idea since 1995 and trying to improve on it.

"We were trained as semiconductor physicists," Lin said, "It didn't just come out of the blue."

Less than 10 institutions and companies nationally can make the blue LEDs, she said, including three or four universities.

As a result, companies like General Electric have approached the group about possible collaboration, liang said.

"Even GE doesn't have their own inaterials," he said.

One reason Lin said the GaN group can provide such rare materials is the expertise of its members, including doctoral student Jing Li and Sixuan Jin, a visiting professor form Peking University.

Jagat Shakya, a doctoral student in the group, said these LEDs are made of gallium nitride, or GaN, grown as positively charged and negatively charged layers on a sapphire base.

When currents are run through the substance, he said, electrons bounce between the layers and emit light. Because the GaN structure has larger energy and gaps, shorter wavelength, higher energy photons are released, Shakya said, thus blue light.

This might not sound like much on the surface, but Tom Oder, a post-doctoral associate in the group, said blue light completes a puzzle that could save millions of dollars. To produce white light, like that from a light bulb, one must combine green, red and blue light, he said.

"For you to make white light, you need blue," he said. "You can replace these guys with white LEDs."

Oder said changing out traffic signals with existing red and green LEDs cold save billions of dollars.

In addition: Lin said LED lights have an average life of at least 20,000 hours, compared to 2,000 to 3,000 hours with incandescent lights.

Shakya said LEDs also have been shown to be roughly 80 percent more efficient for visual lighting, especially since they lose much less energy as heat.

liang said the group has also been looking into improving performance of optical devices with smaller LEDs. One prototype places hundreds of micro LEDs into an area measuring 300 microns by 300 microns.

A human blood cell measures about 10 microns. Using micro LEDs produces an image that is as much as 60 percent brighter, he said, with full color displays also possible.

"You put a lot of smaller ones on instead of a big one, and you get more light," he said.

Many tiny LEDs instead of one big one also allow individual lights to be controlled. Ideally, he said, microscopic LEDs could be huilt onto a lens and huoked up to a lens projection system. The result, he said, could be a set of eyeglasses that play a virtual movie or television image inside the lens that only the viewer could see.

Lin said one of the GaN group's main research objectives is to find the conditions to grow the best wafers through the expertise of members.

By altering conditions like temperature, pressure, crystal variation and layer thickness, the product is aftered. Shakya said.

"We have to play around with the parameters for a high quality material." he said.

U.S. refuses to apologize to China

By ROBERT BURNS

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. —
Secretary of State Colin Powell expressed regret Wednesday over the death of a Chinese pilot when his jet fighter collided with a U.S. spy plane.
But the Bush administration stood firm in its refusal to apologize.

"We regret the loss of life of that Chinese pilot but now we need to move on," Powell told reporters. "We need to bring this to a resolution, and we're using every avenue available to us to talk to the Chinese side to exchange explanations."

In response. Chinese Embassy press counselor Zhang Yuan Yuan called Powell's expression of regret a step in the right direction. Zhang said his own comment was personal and not an official government position.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said the position stated by Powell was expressed earlier in the day by the U.S. ambassador to Beijing in a meeting with the Chinese foreign minister.

"The United States is concerned about the missing Chinese serviceman, and we have expressed our concern and our regrets about that incident." Fleischer said.

Powell called the collision a tragic accident and credited the skills of the U.S. crew for safety landing the aircraft.

Earlier, Fleischer gave what has become the administration's standard response when asked whether there would be an apology. "The United States doesn't understand the reason for an apology. Our airplanes are operating in international airspace, and the United States did nothing wrong."

Fleischer said U.S. Ambassador loseph Prueher was summoned to a meeting earlier Wednesday with the Chinese foreign minister, Tang llaxuan, in Beijing, Tang demanded an apology for the incident, and Prueher refused. Fleischer said. K-State Solar Race Team member Damlan Bråndburg readles himself for a test drive in November 1999. In spite of all the benefits of solar power, inefficiency and energy storage remain problems.

Team prepares solar car

By THERESA BECKER Kansas State Collegian

K-State was host to a race in 1995 that inspired two engineering.

Now, that idea has become the K-State Solar Car Jeam, which competes every other year in national races against other college teams and some professional leams.

Michael Biozeman, junior in Industrial engineering, said working on the team is a learning experience for the students.

"It's a very excellent learning opportunity for students in general. It's just basically a huge senior project." Bozeman said.

The team is responsible for designing, building and racing the car it takes about two years for a car to be completed. Bozeman said.

The car the team is working on now, called CATalysi, will be raced in July at the American Solar Biozeman said the race will go from Chicago to Los Angeles, and the team will have a set amount of time to drive each day, as opposed to a set amount of miles, which is a change from the way it was previously completed.

The race is run every other year, which gives teams like K-State's two years to design and build the car. Hammack said that time is needed.

"When we started in the fall of '99, we had to look at what was available. Now we are using cuttingedge technology," Hammack said.

Last spring, the team started making sketches of the car, in the fall, they started drawing the car on the computer to make sure it all fit together. This semester, they actually have started building it.

CATalyst is taking more time to design than Apollo took. Hammack said, because more design is taking place in the lab as opposed to in the shop.

While most of the technology either is built by students or donated by companies who have sponsored the car, the team needs funds to get to the races, especially the race next November in Australia

Bozeman said the car and team will be competing in the World Solar Challenge, which will race down the continent of Australia.

"In Australia, we will compete against not just college teams," Bozeman said. "Ford will have a car there, and Honda will have a car there. It's just huge."

Hammack said there are two main costs associated with an international race like the one in Australia.

"The two biggest costs are shipping the car and shipping the team," Hammack said, "but shipping the car is easier."

Racing the car is not the only experience the team is gaining.

Hammack said the team is run like an internship at a company and that most companies who know about the team hire team members after graduation.

"The way we run our team and the way we design is like working for GM at an internship. We're doing things that are getting published in engineering magazines," Hammack said.

This helps the team members get jobs after graduation with companies that sponsored them. Sponsorship, which comes in many forms, is primarily through donation of technology.

Hammack said a company in Overland Park, Kan., agreed to make a chip that attaches to each of the 650 battery cells in the car. Partnerships like these have helped the team prepare for and compete in the national and international races.

After the races are over, it's back to the crowded, computer-packed lab in the basement of Ward Hall to begin designing the next K-State solar car. It will mean more Friday nights spent in the lab and more spring breaks spent in the shop.

Cats focus on middle attackers

By MICHAEL NOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's volleyball team has feasted on a steady diet of outside hitting for the past two

The program's two All-Americans, Dawn Cady in 1999 and senior Liz Wegner in 2000, both were outside hitters, and this season the Cat roster leatures four players at that position who have considerable match experience.

Leading the way will be Wegner, but senior Lisa Mimick and sophomore Cari Jensen both started last season. In addition, the Cats also will have junior lenny Pollard, who saw considerable playing time before injuring her back. All three players had over 200 kills in 2000.

That said, much of the Cats' spring practice has been devoted to reducing their dependence on outside hitting. Instead, the focus has been on getting more production from the middle blockers.

"That was one of our goals going into the spring was to increase our middle attacking, and we've got to have more of a balanced offense." Wegner said. "I think that's a big difference between this year's team and last year's team. We're going to see a lot more middle, and I think that's really going to make us a better team. People aren't going to know Next action: what to expect."

The average for the top 16 teams in the nation is 30 percent, assistant coach Jason

As a result. K-State's offense has worked more to get quick hits from the middle blockers, head coach Jim McLaughlin said.

With the new emphasis on quick hits, the responsibilities for the setter have changed as "In the past, I've tended to be quite a leftside dominant setter," senior Disney Bronnenberg said. "Jim and I talked at the beginning of the year that in order to improve. we've got to set more quicks, so that's definitely something that's on my mind every time I walk into practice.

Setting quick hits hasn't been on just Bronnenberg's mind, though. Sophomore setter Laura Downy has improved after sitting out last season as a redshirt.

"Her game is slowly coming together. I think she's feeling more comfortable. She does all the things you need to do to improve." McLaughlin said, "She works hard, she's focused, she thinks about the game, she lifts weights hard, she's always going hard. I really believe that the great players play every play, in the off-season and during the season. Every play is important to

Scoring system might change for next season

Volleyball scores will look much different next season.

> The NCAA Division I Women's Volleyball Committee and the Girls and Women in Sport proposed changing the scoring system in early February. The changes would utilize a best three-out-offive rally scoring format to 30 points in games one through four and rally scoring to 15 in the deciding fifth game. All games must still be won by two points.

Now, all fevels of women's collegiate volleyball use the traditional side-out scoring to 15 points with rally scoring in the tie-breaking fifth game. NCAA men's volleyball implemented the all-rally scoring format for its current 2001 season. The changes could go into effect for the 2001 championship season if approved

Volleyball team struggles to replace middle blocker

K-State's volleyball team graduated just one starter from last year's No. 16

Unfortunately for the Cais, that one graduate was middle blocker Kelle Branting, who set the all-time school record for kills by a middle blocker. She also finished her career ranked in the top 10 in six school career

Close calls, pitching key to Wildcats' loss to Oral Roberts base umpire Dwight Nichols saw it differently and raised his right finger to signal the home run after running down the line to get a better look.

Almost immediately, Clark bounded from the K-State dugout, sprinting down the line to disagree. After a few choice words, the Wildcats' skipper made his way back to the dugout still not satisfied.

'It was obvious, I wasn't happy," Clark said.

Disney Bronnenberg sets the ball in a game against Texas last season. Graduating only one starter, the Cats look to focus on quick hits from middle blockers this season.

What I saw is what I think pretty much everybody else in the ballpark saw. I mean, we've got guys in the bullpen that are right on top of it."

> The ball just didn't bounce the Cats' way Wednesday afternoon. After the Golden. Eagles' first hit dropped inches away from the right field foul line resulting in a leadoff double for Chad Stewart, Clark began to ponder other solutions to the situation. "I'm taking the balls to Father Keith at St. Isidore's, and we're going to have them blessed," he said. "We're going to take care of that. We're getting the devils out of the baseballs."

It's been a matter of inches all season for K-State's baseball team, and although Wednesday's game wasn't significantly affected by those two close calls, it's been frustrating for the Cats to see

"It seems like all season it's been going that way," freshman pitcher Wes Vrska said afterwards.

"A ball that looks like it's not going to fall will fall right in front of the outfielders or hit the line. or a homerun that's clearly foul will be called fair. All season it's been like that, and we haven't really got those breaks."

Vrska didn't get many breaks, either, in his first start. The Claremore, Okla., product went just 2+ innings, giving up four runs before giving way to Brite in the third.

"I was pretty excited to throw against them because they're out of my hometown, but I didn't do my job," Vrska said.

With a key weekend series against Oklahoma State slated to kickoff Friday evening in Stillwater, Okla., Clark said he was refuctant to use veteran pitchers Chad Duckers or Luke Robertson in the Cats' midweek tuneup against Oral Roberts.

Still. Clark said he was content with the way his team performed against the talented Mid-Continent conference powerhouse.

"We competed well up there. It's just too many times we don't make the two-strike adjustment at the plate," he said.

"It's still the little things like that against somebody like we faced today that make the difference in the game. K-State will have to find a way to make those adjustments soon, with key Big 12 series on the horizon against Oklahoma State. Oklahoma and Missouri and a non-conference visit to Manhattan by UCLA on the schedule for the remainder of April.

Woodlee makes gradual transition

Life as an athlete always is hectic. You've got to go to class, go to practice, watch film, go to weights, watch more film, go home and try to study, go to bed late and get up early, and do it all over again. But most importantly, for senior Kim Woodlee. you've got to play ball.

Every day for four years was focused on making the next threepointer and winning the next game.

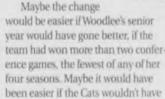

You arrive on campus as a freshman, learn the ropes, get thrown into the mix, watch the seniors leave, do it over again the next year, and the next and the next, only this time, as a senior, the pressure's on to win, to have your best season, to lead the team, to teach the freshmen and so you do all that, plus try to graduate. The games pass, the days whiz by, and all of a sudden, it's over.

No more basketball or weights or film. Nothing to do but study and look back at the past and think about what was and what could have been, and wait for your body to slow down to the pace of regular life

"I'm in an adjustment phase, I guess, probably the biggest adjustment I've ever made ever," said Woodlee, the Big 12's second-best alltime three-point shooter.

"If I don't work out for a while, I usually can't sleep. It's a big adjustment to go from two-a-days and weights and games to nothing. I do feel completely lazy if I take one day off, it seems like, I feel like I've got to do something for a while just to get my heartbeat up.

lost by 16 points in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament to Baylor, the same team that beat them by 18 the week before.

Fortunately, Woodlee got to compete with the best collegiate shooters in the College Three-Point Championships on ESPN, a vindication of her ability

"That was a lot better way to go out. It was an honor to be in such good company and to know that people understood I could shoot the ball," she said. "So I felt a lot better to end that way than to end on a

MICHAEL NOLL

Still, even in that friendly competition, Woodlee couldn't just play for fun.

It didn't matter who won, sure, but after four years of being judged by the final score, just shooting around is hard to do. So, Woodlee still thinks about the three-point championship, where she smoked the competition through two rounds and lost by just one basket in the final round. "I felt like I definitely did rush the last rack, and I don't know if that's because I started off good, but I still had five or six seconds left after I shot my last ball, and that was too fast to shoot them," she said. "If I had known it was only one point, or if I'd had somebody to count to me to tell me I still had 15 seconds on the last rack. I'd have probably slowed down."

Now, with nothing to do but study. all that thinking can get to be too

"If I get too much thinking time, I just go to the Rec and hang out," she said. "I wear myself down.

But she doesn't shoot baskets. "I haven't shot any since the see me at the rec, you'll probably see me on some machine trying to kill myself."

Eventually, though, the transition away from basketball will become easier. Woodlee's body will slow down and the demands of the real world, of a future nursing career, will fill her mind.

But until she graduates, at least, she always will be reminded of basketball, as one of her roommates, Kristin Rethman, still is playing for K-State.

But that too will pass, and all she will have left is the memories. Of course, her athletic life isn't necessarily over. There's another sport Woodlee once played but had to quit too soon.

"I used to be a decent shortstop," she said. "I was 13 when I played last time. I remember I was missing softball games for baskerball practice. I felt like I was shorthanding my softball team, so I ended up just choosing and going with basketball.

That was fun. I'll probably get back into that, I think.

The other possibility is sophomore Lisa Martin, who began last season at outside hitter but moved to middle blocker this spring. While that move has required the Hutchinson, Kan., native to learn a new position, she has shown early promise, senior outside hitter Liz Wegner said.

"She is so athletic, and she can just jump out of the gym. She's out there working her butt off," she said.

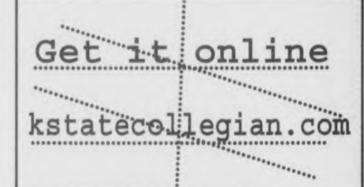

"I can't say enough about how good of a player she's going to be. She has so many options, so many things she can do. It's a good move for our team."

The new position has required Martin to change her footwork and techniques somewhat, but the transition has been fairly smooth.

"It's a little different blocking for her. She was working on right side and she only had really one main responsibility. Now she has all three hitters she has to worry about blocking," Wegner said. "She gets out there, and she's never really done it before, and she's just blocking so many balls."

The way both players have played this spring, though, the decision on who starts won't be easy, McLaughlin said,

"We're developing some competition, and whoever starts, they're going to be two really nice middle blockers," he said.

by the NCAA Championships Cabinet during their meetings in late June

If the changes are passed, a result could be more exciting matches.

"You can't really blow a team away with this type of scoring, senior Liz Wegner said. "They side out and they get a point automatically. It's challenging. It just adds a different element from the game."

In addition to making the game faster paced, the new scoring system would also change game plans somewhat.

"You can't afford to miss a serve, period," Wegner said. "You have to win the serve and pass battle, which (head coach) lim (McLaughlin) has said all along, but it's so much more important now. You lose that battle.

you lose the game. Passing also gains increased importance, senior setter Disney Bronnenberg said.

*Especially going to rally scoring next year, it just gives us all a sense of urgency of every single play," she said, "and so each contact of the ball is so extremely important, and the first contact of the play is obviously a pass, so we've been putting a lot of time into it."

The changes would also allow the ball to hit the net on the serve. which could lead to more aggressive

"The serve can hit the net and go over and so you could be aggressive and score that way, but then again, if you serve too aggressive and you serve it out of bounds, you lose a point." Wegner said. "So it's kind of a give and take relationship. We're really playing the percentages right now, trying to figure out how many serves we can miss and we keep track of it every day in practice."

While trying to minimize errors. K-State will be more aggressive on the serve this season. Wegner said.

We're really working on moving back and letting the serve float some more," she said

"We're just trying to be real aggressive, get back and bang the serve and really try to throw some teams off."

Tax increase leads to defeat of school finance, education bills

By JOHN MILBURN The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Senators took five hours Wednesday to send a tax-Paising school finance package back To committee. The House needed less than 20 minutes to send the Same plan to its death.

On a voice vote, the Senate returned a two-year, $263 million finance package to its Education Committee for more work. The bill would have raised taxes on sales. liquor, alcohol and soft drinks to add $240 to the state's base aid for schools per pupil.

In the House, brief debate preceded a 115-7 vote to kill the plan. Fifty minutes later, the House Silled Gov. Bill Graves' $112 million plan to raise sales and motor fuels caxes for education on a vote of 68-

House leaders have repeatedly said opposition to raising taxes is strong in their chamber, so the rejection of both proposals was expected.

Senate Education Chairman Dwayne Umbarger said his Committee would meet quickly to pare down its proposal, probably Concentrating on increasing the base state aid and early childhood initiatives and dropping a provision mising the state's coverage of special ducation costs.

Umbarger, R-Thayer, said the

"That's the dilemma: How do you push the envelope without getting into people's pockets?"

 Dwayne Umbarger, Senate education chairman committee could produce a new plan with a tax increase, but he wasn't optimistic

"That's the dilemma: How do you push the envelope without getting into people's pockets?" he said.

Sen. Christine Downey of Newton, ranking Democrat on the Education Committee, saw it other-

Downey said other proposals were likely to get a fresh look, such as a plan reversing some of the 1998 cuts in Kansas' estate tax or a suggestion from Minority Leader Anthony Hensley of Topeka to create a fourth tax bracket for high-income Kansans

"Everybody's working with numbers," she said.

"We might have had a positive vote on this thing if we had gotten the tax mix right."

The Senate rejected an amendment offered by Sen. Nancey Harrington to scrap the committee's plan and increase school funding without a tax increase - by the $68 million proposed by Graves in his State of the State address.

Harrington, R-Goddard, said her amendment was a chance for senators to go on record as being for education and increasing state support, but not for raising taxes.

The $68 million already is included in a budget bill agreed to by House and Senate negotiators, but Graves has said repeatedly it is inadequate.

The Senate Education Committee's plan called for increasing the state sales tax to 5.1 percent from 4.9 percent over two years, raising the taxes on liquor and cigarettes, and imposing a new tax on soft drinks

The plan would have increased school spending by $110 million the first year and $152 million in the second. At the end of the second year, the base state aid per pupil would have been $4,060, up from the current $3,820.

Graves offered a one-year, $112 million plan, financed by raising the sales tax to 5.1 percent from 4.9 percent in one year and raising motor fuels taxes by 2 cents per welcome relief to Downey, who spent the last two seasons learning the setter position after moving from outside hitter.

Combined with his previous budget recommendation of $68 million at the start of the session. Graves would add $110 to the base state aid per pupil, making it $3,930.

"Last spring was very frustrating. I was never a setter in high school, so the first part of the learning process was very difficult." Downey said. "Things always came really easily to me, and they weren't coming that easily. It was taking a lot of hard work and just reps, reps, reps. I think I was really shy when I first started because I wasn't confident in the things I was doing.

"I think sitting out and redshirting was good because I got to watch a lot and see a lot of things that other people don't see."

While Downey still has improvement yet to go, she has caught on to K-State's new focus on quick hits fairly easily.

"I think in the beginning, I set middle better than I ever set outside." Downey said. "My location outside wasn't as good as it was with the middles. Anything in front with the middles is good, but behind me needs a little work."

In fact, Downey's ability to set the quick hit actually has given her a slight edge over Bronnenberg early in the spring season.

"Right now, Laura Downey is playing a little bit better than her." McLaughlin said.

Bronnenberg, though, also has! played well, he said.

"There's nothing easy about 👱 becoming a great player, becoming a great team. Otherwise, everyone? in the world would do it." McLaughlin said. "There are some demands, there are some commitments you have to make as a division one elite athlete. I think Diz is doing that.

Nevertheless, the pressure is on for the two setters to become great players sooner than later.

"The cream will rise, but it's got to start rising today," McLaughlin said. "It's got to start happening every day. We can't wait until August to get this going."

Ultimate Fakebook comes home to rock 'n' roll

By JJ DUNCAN

oud pop rock will return to Manhattan tonight as Ultimate Fakebook makes a homecoming performance. We're just excited to come to Manhattan and rock out," said Bill McShane, guitarist and vocalist for Ultimate Fakebook. "Manhattan is where we got our start. We have friends here, so it's a totally different attitude from our usual

Since the three-piece band got its start in Manhattan more than five years ago, it has made its major label debut with "This Will Be Laughing Week," released on Sony, and the band has been touring extensively. McShane said going from working at Subway to making a living off the music has been an exciting progression. "Rock 'n Roll is now officially our profession," he said. "We've been working hard because this band is a real thing. It's cool not to have to work at a fast food place to pay the bills. "I think it's been a nice-paced progression, too. We're not really huge, but we just keep touring and building a fan base and doing what we love." fonight's show is one of the few shows Ultimate Fakebook will be playing before beginning their tour later this month with MXPX and Good Charlotte. They also have just finished recording six songs for an EP with Reggie and the Full Effect to be released this summer.

Jeff Bilberry, senior in advertising, said the songwriting abilities of Ultimate Fakebook create an upbeat sound that drives the music.

"They've got the catchy hooks of Cheap Trick. and the pop drive of Weezer, all rolled into a threepiece band that'll knock your socks off," he said. Opening up for Ultimate Fakebook will be

'It's a good deal because we've been friends with the guys in Ultimate Fakebook for a long time,' he said. "I just hope we don't do ton much damage to ourselves after the Bilberry said it has been exciting to get the Ultimate Fakebook show pul together. and the opening acts couldn't be better suited for the occasion. With the Egomaniacs' live show gaining popularity in the Kansas City, Mo., and Lawrence areas and Time Has Come working on material for their upcoming album. the show is solid. Bifberry said.

"This is Kansas rock at its best," he said. "Hopefully, people will soon gain some respect for the Manhattan music scene because it is getting strong, but we still have quite a way to go."

Bilberry, who has been promoting the show along with three other upcoming shows at Silverado's, said this show is the precursor for the K-Rock three-way this mooth. The Phunk Junkeez will perform Monday. The Urge will appear April 12 and The Digital Underground will perform April 24. At the show tonight, tickets will be given away for all three shows, Bilberry said.

Supporting music by providing a venue for known acts, Jeff Hawkinson, owner of Silverado Saloon, said the live music is good for the community. Hawkinson said he has been working with Bilberry for about a year to bring in more shows, and so far he has been pleased with the results.

"The place is hig enough to have known bands in here comfortably, and they usually bring in quite a few people, and it gives local bands a chance to be seen as well," he said.

When writing a song, McShane said the band doesn't worry about showing off musically, but instead they write the song so it will be memorable and fun to listen to. The process is down to a science, McShane said. After he comes up with several melodies for songs, the band chooses the best and makes songs out of them. The lyrics are added later.

"Our goal has always been to write catchy songs, so seeing people at a show sing along is great," he said, "Sometimes when we're on tour, it's amazing to see kids singing along where we've never played."

The goal of Ultimate Fakebook at a live show is to make the people who don't normally get into the music lose themselves and rock out, McShane said. The band is devoted to putting on energetic performances and getting the audience into the music, McShane said.

"Our live show got us where we are, so we take it seriously." he said. "We're all about going. for it every single night and not ever holding

Rally supports school's survival

Balloons, face painting and juggling are not the typical components of a rally of teachers and parents who are facing a possible closing of their school.

The goal was to stress the positive, though, at Bluemont Elementary School's rally at 7 p.m. Thursday. The school celebrated its programs and activities.

"Bluemont is the most brilliant Jewel in the crown of the district," said Dave Colburn, site council member and parent of two children at Bluemont. "What will our children and grandchildren think of us if we sell off this jewel to settle this temporary financial problem?"

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383's enrollment is down by approximately 300 students this year, and Bluemont is one of four elementary schools the Manhattan/Ogden Board of Education is considering shutting down because of budget cuts. "A lot of what they are talking about is way over there on paper," Ali Lousch, site council chairperson, said. "We want them to be over here focusing on our children." Nobody leaves Bluemont the way they came in, Lousch said, which she did not expect when she first moved to the area. She said she was skeptical because of the older and worn-down appearance of the Bluemont's principal, Lori Martin, said the students, teachers, parents and many volunteers have made this the best year of her administrative career.

"A school building is a structure that consists of bricks, stones, wood and mortar," Martin said. "The real mortar is the community that exists within this building.

The elementary school has 284 students and 329 community volunteers. Martin said community members have expressed their concern that the school

Thursday night's rally, she said, was an attempt to unite as a community and to focus on preserving the things that are right in the district.

"How can we come up with a creative solution for all of Manhattan and serve all of the children of Manhattan?" she said, "We don't want schools going against other schools because that does not serve the children."

Colburn said he does not care if his children have to transfer to another school. They will do well wherever they go, he said.

"I don't care where they go," he said. "For me, though, it is absurd to think about breaking up an organization doing so well."

Senate supports loan tax credit

The bills, Senate Bill 516 and House of Representative Bill 1072, allow graduates to use interest off their loan as a tax credit, Barker said. An example is a credit of $1,500 per year for interest on student loans up to $20,000.

Greek houses gather at City Park for 1st random selection of partners for activities at 2001 Homecoming.

It was all surprises and cheers when Homecoming selections were announced to fraternities and sororities Thursday night.

For the first time, K-State fraternities and sororities were matched for Homecoming activities by a random process. Each greek house gathered at City Park to hear the announcements together and to promote the unity of fall 2001 Homecoming Week.

Selections were determined by drawing fraternity names out of a hat. A representative of each sorority drew numbers to determine the order of the drawing for fraternities. After the drawing, each new grouping was announced.

"We've gathered everyone together so we can create enthusiasm from the get-go," said Lindsay Vogel, Panhellenic Council executive secretary. "We're trying something different, and everyone is prepared for it." In the past, Homecoming groups were determined by a bidding process. Fraternities mutually decided which fraternity they would partner with, and on an every-other-year basis, the fraternities bid a sorority or vice-versa. The change in the selection process occurred

Aggieville bar to expand floor space, add shop for souvenirs

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon is taking over the former Mighty Fine Donuts shop to accommodate for the large crowds and offer a place for customers to buy souvenirs.

"This is just an extension of Last Chance," owner Rusty Wilson said. "It is not a separate bar."

Rusty's Next Door also is an extension of Last Chance, Wilson said. He named the different parts of Chance to enable customers to have places to meet their friends without getting lost in the large bar.

Wilson and KMKF-FM 101.5 will be host to a contest to name the extension. Wilson and Chance managers will judge the names provided by listeners and award the winner $200 and $200 in Chance gift certificates,

"I have a few ideas myself," Wilson said. "I want to see what the people will come up

In addition to the contest, Wilson is opening a souvenir shop in the new bar. The shop will offer things such as Chance apparel, T-shirts from other current and former Aggieville shops and bars, neon beer signs and various apparel and accessories bearing alcoholic beverage logos.

"It's something I've always wanted to do," Wilson said.

The shop will be nestled in the corner of the expansion and designed to enable the bartender to tend to drinking customers as well as cover the shop, he said.

Allison Saber, K-State graduate and Chance waitress, said the souvenir shop will reduce the hassle of selling shirts in the bar.

"I work every game day, whether it's basketball or football," Saber said. "A lot of people come from out of town and they want to buy souvenirs. This is giving them an option in one big space to see everything." Many customers want to buy shirts from old bars in Aggieville as well, Saber said.

Pete Anderson, Chance bartender, said he agrees that the souvenir shop will be a successful addition to Chance.

"We're excited," Anderson said. "It's something no other bars have done." The souvenir shop will offer beer merchandise that are hard to find, Anderson said. The employees are excited about the extension and souvenir shop, Wilson said.

"They get excited every time I do something new," he said. "It gives them a change in pace."

Foot-and-mouth disease concern of researchers

The emergence of foot-andmouth disease, and the most recent outbreak in the British Isles, has caused concern within the United States and on many local levels, including Manhattan.

Sanjay Kapil, diagnostic virologist and associate professor of diagnostic medicine pathbiology for the College of Veterinary Medicine, said he has received several calls and questions in regards to foot-and-mouth disease. Students have also stopped by his office with travel questions.

"I have received calls from a grain marketer in Nebraska and an air force unit in Wichita, Kan., Kapil said. "There is a public fear in Kansas and Nebraska of the spread of foot-and-mouth disease."

As the only board certified diagnostic virologist at K-State, Kapil's job is to help regulatory agencies control, prevent and eradicate viral diseases of animals. He is responsible for infectious diseases and viruses for the state of Kansas, which is a key factor in Kapil's desire for educating people about foot-and-mouth disease.

Foot-and-month is a contagious disease caused by a virus that affects cloven-hoofed animals such as cattle, swine, sheep, goals. camels and deer, he said. The main symptoms include excessive salivation and an eruption of blisters in the mouth, on areas of tender skin such as the udder in female livestock, on feet and in the nostrils. It can also cause animals to become lame, and animals raised for meat or milk lose weight and give less milk.

The only case of mor-andmonth that has been documented in the United States was in 1929 in the state of California.

Foot-and-mouth disease is a great menace to livestock raisers, meat-packing, dairy, leather and wool industries. Progress had been made in developing an effective vaccine but it would not eradicate the disease. The only current solution to the disease is to kill the infected animals.

Kevin Varner, area veterinarian in charge for the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Animal and Plant Health Inspection, Veterinary Services, said they are receiving calls every day.

"There is so much heightened concern since it is happening in England," Varner said. "There is a lot of interest - especially in travelers."

The virus is transmitted through contact with infected animals, primarily by aerosols or through respiration.

"It only takes one to 10 particles to get infected," Varner said. "It is carried by people, vehicles and soles of feet.

Varner said the USDA has sent out 900 informational packets to select veterinarians in the State of Kansas in regards to foot-andmouth disease.

"Diagnostic labs in the United States are afraid of foot-andmouth disease and also afraid of missing it since it is not seen very often." Kapil said.

The effect of foot-and-mouth disease on the agricultural. industry of the United States will be significant, Kapil said.

'The impact will be enormous,' Kapil said. "It will effect farmers, day by day people, food supplies, cause unnecessary restrictions on visiting zoos, travel and day-to-day

Legislators face cutting budget by $185 million

TOPEKA - Legislators have learned they will have to cut more than $185 million from the budget recommendations they are close to approving.

According to new revenue estimates Wednesday, the state will collect $74 million less than previously expected in the fiscal year that ends June 30 - and $111 million less than earlier predicted for fiscal 2002, which begins July 1.

The new numbers reflected estimators' belief that the growth of the Kansas economy is slowing.

Gov. Bill Graves and legislators had expected some had news, but the numbers stunned many of

"I didn't expect the numbers to he this bad," Graves told reporters. The numbers were released just hours after the House voted 94-29 to approve a compromise $9.11 hillion spending bill containing the bulk of the state's fiscal 2002.

The bill went to the Senate, where leaders still hoped for the approval Thursday that would send it to Graves.

Sen. Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, said rewriting the budget would come later because going back into the bill would be too compli-

Olympics spice up Ag Fest

By CAMILLE BOISSEAU Kansas State Collegian

Blind-folded wheelbarrowpushing was just one of the things K-State students students did Thursday evening to bring awareness of agriculture to campus.

Cowboy Olympics was part of the annual Ag Fest week sponsored by the K-State Rodeo Club and Pre-Veterinary Club.

The purpose of this event was to provide a forum for ag students to mix serious with fun while being willing to come out and get dirty." said Kevin Donnelly, IAg Student Council adviser, "We also wanted to raise awareness on this campus about agriculture."

Participants competed in cowboy-type events such as hay stacking. water bucket obstacles and wheelbarrow races to win the Golden Horseshoe award, a gold-painted horseshoe for the winner to wear around their neck.

Katie Janssen, Agricultural Council representative for Rodeo Club, said the goal for the event was for participants to have firm and get crazy while bringing students together.

"The theme of the week is to gain campus and community awareness about agriculture," said Janssen. junior in food science and animal

Neil Boyer, senior in animal science, said he participated in the event to have fun and win.

"This event shows what really happens on the farm to an extent, so people should appreciate how hard farm work actually is," Boyer said. "I planned on having to come out and move hay and participate in a bucket relay, but my favorite event was the wheel bucket race."

Issac Frasier, juntor in agriculture technology management, said the event was a great way to get agriculture students together to come out and have fun.

The College of Agriculture has had other activities to help gain awareness of their programs on this campus.

"We have posted signs with ag facts, had guest speakers, and on-Friday we are having a barbecue open to the general public," lanssen said. "Agriculture has a large impact on our lives, and we want people to be aware

Book sale to raise money for library, offer cheap textbooks

Kansas State Collegian

The Friends of the Library will have its Annual Book Sale for Saturday to Tuesday at Hale Library.

The sale begins at 9 a.m. Saturday. Books will range in their subjects.

"Students should come. They are bound to find a topic they are interested in and for a reasonable price." said Bob Newhouse, assistant dean of the College of Education.

The books are acquired from donations made by Manhattan citizens and a Friends of the Library drop-off donation site.

People clean their basements and find books which they decide to donate," he said. "Sometimes professors retire and do not want their books anymore."

The money received from the sale helps fund Hale Library.

"The money usually goes for new books, or new chairs, or anything to improve the quality of Hale,' Newhouse said.

Newhouse said he encourages people to visit the sale.

"The money goes for a good cause to support the library," he said. "You can basically buy as many books as you can carry. If you look around, you might just find a book that interests you."

Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of the library, said she thinks the book sale is a great way for students to save money.

"You can really find wonderful deals," she said.

One thing makes the sale unique over other book sales, McCulloh

"We have textbooks that you can purchase for really cheap, and not everyone has these books for sale at such a low price," she said.

McCulloh said she believes the sale is good for the students.

"It helps the library, and if you are not interested in textbooks, we also have fiction for something fun to read," she said.

Paperbacks will be $1 and hardback books $2.

"The book sale is also an opportunity to find an affordable present for someone, especially with Mother's Day and Father's Day coming up," McCulloh said.

Last year, the library raised $6,000 in funds from the sale.

"We were able to add 500 books to the library collection through the book sale." McCulloh said. "It saved the library lots of money."

Tournament to benefit Red Cross

By HEATHER GRACE

Golfers from around Manhattan will tee off at 8 a.m. Saturday at Colbert Hills Golf Course to raise funds for local American Red Cross chapters.

In memory of Clara Barton, founder of the American Red Cross, the Riley and Fort Riley Chapters of the American Red Cross will be host to the four-person scramble to raise money for the Fort Riley Disaster Relief Fund

Clay Myers-Bowman, executive director of the Riley County American Red Cross Chapter, said on the amount of money the chapters can receive, but the awareness for the continued need for a Fort Riley Disaster Relief Fund,

"We are excited to have a golf tournament where we can have fun and also make aware the need to continue to have a disaster relief fund for families who experience disasters," Myers-Bowman said.

Ten teams will participate in the tournament. Tiffany Minor, public relations assistant and charity golf tournament coordinator for the Riley County American Red Cross, said the chapter is happy with the numbers.

"We're glad it's a small group," Minor said. "It will be a little more intimate. That will allow us to facilitate and develop relationships between community members and our organization."

Each golfer paid a $100 fee, which includes a continental breakfast, green fees, cart rental, driving range privileges and lunch concluding the tournament.

Shelly Moran, tournament coordinator for Colbert Hills Golf Course, said everyone is looking forward to the event.

"We were honored to be approached by the American Red Cross to have the tournament at Colbert Hills," Moran said. "It's a fun course to play and it was fun planning the event.

Prizes of $400, $200 and $100 will be given to the top three finishing teams in the tournament.

Competition prizes also include a one year car lease from Dick Edwards for a hole-in-one, $50 for the longest and shortest drives and $50 for the longest putt.

"A lot of bard work has gone into the tournament, and I'm proud of how it's turned out," Minor said. "It should be a lot of fun for everyone."

Stalkers come in variety of shapes, sizes, but victims can take proactive steps to live free from terror

It is the typical scene in a scary movie. There is the young woman who is alone in her apartment, but suddenly finds herself no longer alone. The main scary, evil dude is hunting her down. Usually, he has a knife. As you watch the scene unfold, you become scared for the victim. You want to warn her about the, guy with the knife, how he is just around the corner. But you think to yourself, it is just a movie. Nothing will happen to her. You know that fear you feel for the movie's victim. Imagine having that fear 24-7, and that is what having a stalker feels MICHELLE BERTUGLIA Every time there is a knock on your door, you stiffen up and contemplate answering it. When the phone rings, you don't have the luxury of simply answering it. Caller ID becomes your best friend. You are too scared to have your car parked in front of your house or have your last name on the mailbox. In short, you live your life in fear. The terror they place into your daily life is secondary only to the thoughts of what they might do to you. That scary movie anticipation becomes your reality.

Just look at the word, s-t-a-l-k-e-r. Let the syllables roll around for a few moments in your mouth. It is a scary word. One that can illicit chills down anyone's spine. It is a word we don't take seriously until we are forced to.

It has taken me a year and a half to say this word with conviction. For me, it started out as a joke with my friends. "Yeah, don't pick up the phone. Looks like my stalker is on caller ID." Or my friends would leave me messages on my answering machine saying things like, "OK, Michelle, you can stop screening your phone calls now. It is just me, not the Jokes mirror reality. When one person calls you more than 20 times in a night, stops by your house obsessively or leaves scary things on your front porch, it is not a joke anymore. Having to live your life around another person finding you is not a joke.

One in 12 women will be stalked. Yeah, take a look around in whatever class you are in, count 12 women and one of them will live their life in fear. According to the Survivors of Stalking web site, www.soshelp.org/, women are the primary target of stalkers. A woman is three times more likely to be stalked than raped. The most chilling statistic is that most violent crimes begin with stalking.

So what are characteristics of this maniac who won't let you live your life in peace? Well, the Antistalking Web site, www.antistalking.com, lists three main classifications of stalkers.

There is the intimate partner stalker. These people are known as the people who don't want to believe it is over. They will do anything to try and win their partner back. According to the site, well over half of the stalkers there fit into this category.

The second type of stalker is the delusional stalker. This kind of stalker usually has little contact with the victim prior to stalking them. This kind of stalker has some kind of false belief that they are destined to be with that person and if pursued long enough, the victim will come to love them.

Vengeful is the final stalker category. These are the kind of stalkers who get mad over some kind of "slight," real or imagined. The site says this kind of stalker is one with little conscious or remorse.

So, what should you do once you realize you are being stalked? Most of the literature states that once you have said, "Listen buddy, leave me the hell alone." That is all the verbal contact you should have with them. The more you talk or try to reason with them, the less they hear. The Antistalking site says this is fuel for their fire. If they learn that all it takes is some persistent or annoying behavior to get your attention, they will keep on harassing you.

The Antistalking site emphasizes the importance of telling everyone you know that you are being stalked and they are not to give out your phone number or address.

You also can call the police. They will come to the scene and tell the stalker to leave. Capt. Gary Grubbs, from the Riley County Police Department said sometimes this is all it will take for the stalker to leave the victim alone, Grubbs said, once the police officer is dispatched.

they have to file a report about the incident. If it persists, and the police are continually called, the stalker can be arrested.

The Antistalking site states that if the stalker does get your home phone number, never ever pick up the phone when they call, you or your roommates. The more contact with them, the easier things are made for them. It is important to document everything, everything, everything. Make copies or keep phone calls, e-mails, presents, threats, so if you do decide to prosecute or get a restraining order against them, you will have more to battle with.

Another option is to take your address off of the K-State Web site, which can be done by going to the K-State White Pages on the K-State Web site at

No one should ever be scared of going home, answering their phone or leaving their car parked in front of their house. While you might not be able to choose if you are being stalked, you do have the power to make this thing we joke about no longer a laughing matter. The fact that you are being stalked says something about the stalker, not about you. Don't be ashamed to get help. No one should ever bave to live in fear.

Daily grind of college life can pay off at finish

Your sitting in a car, the radio's on and the engine is revving. It triggers the end of a day of classes. Collegian work and the fact that the day portion of my to-do list has been completed.

It signals yet another night to go home, enter a messy apartment, gat a bucket of macaroni and cheese and fight through another homework assignment.

It is a night when the NICK BRATKOVIC norm will be to question why I am doing this, and the answer will get lost in ideology. A night when the television will blare, and my attention span to studies will zip in and out, quicker than a Britney Spears commercial for Pepsi-Cola exits the A night when largely what I think and believe will be tested. A night when slamming down food and writing a column will headline a to-do list. This column will be different, though. No more rambunctious calls for global change. Not this week. This column will look at what K-State students want to do and what they want Wildcat land to be

It won't drivel in the big picture, but will attempt to provide the university with ideas and possible direction on pertinent issues.

Sure, it will try to provide answers, and if you don't like the solutions, you can feel free to propose new ones.

Above all else, K-State students want time.

It tops the list. More time, and we would all have 4.0s. More time, and Al Gore would have been president. More time and the hardworking students of this university might be able to enjoy themselves.

Time is the essential nugget that can be captured on a clock, divided into hours, minutes and seconds, but never added

Sure, a person can attempt to multiply their time, but by doing this, they often are cutting back on sleep. Moderation, is the key some say to managing time, but moderation doesn't always meet deadline or ensure good grades on a test. Moderation doesn't ensure excellence. No one ever failed and said, "At least I didn't overdo my effort in studying."

Time tops the list, but parking has been an issue since the Reagan administration. We want good parking on this campus.

what price? At the price of paying for a parking garage or a shuttle system? At the price of funding a mass transit system in Manhattani Those are the central issues. Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, receives a lot of flack and criticism, but directors simply can't wish for a new parking system.

Do students really want a solution? For all the anonymous calls to the fourum, there are few letters to the editor, or open speakers at Student Senate addressing the issue of parking. I bring it up, but do not have a clear-cut solution.

The only clear cut solution would be to pay for the service of a new parking garage or transportation system. Simple, pass a referendum, and let's build the damn thing. But wishes and pocket books are not always seen or pursued in the same light.

We want a society that appears to be fair and dead week to be dead.

A meter that doesn't run out of time and green lights that don't turn red.

We want classes that do not close and wish wholeheartedly for the hiring freezes to melt We want the life of a student to allow us to have fun. It often is said that this is the best time of a person's life. But what

At least students claim they do. But at makes it so great? Sometimes a person can start to wonder.

> But then it becomes clear. Perhaps even with the complaints, it beats a work force available for a non-college educated person. And at least in college we are reminded that people care about

That reminds us to believe that we are young enough to make a difference. If getting old means being cynical, then stay young.

Let's believe the struggles that we go through on a daily basis will pay off. That the hardships combined with endless buckets of macaroni and cheese someday will be remembered fondly as what we did to survive in college. The messy apartment will be a cherished bachelor pad, and the Britney Spears commercial will be an interesting side note to remember while watching VH1's "Where Are They Now?"

Until then, be young, and go after what you want. Pursue change and don't be afraid to work for it. The obligations and to-do lists might get old, but the quest never wavers.

Bush refuses to apologize to China

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The standoff with China over a downed reconnaissance plane showed signs of easing Thursday. "We are working all diplomatic channels." President Bush said.

Bush said he regrets that a Chinese pilot is missing and that his plane was lost. At the same time, the president told a convention of newspaper editors, China must allow the 24 U.S. crew members to come home.

"The Chinese have got to act, and I hope they do so quickly," Bush said.

Bush spoke amid a flurry of diplomatic activity over the crippled Navy spy plane, stranded on China's Hainan Island since it made an emergency landing Sunday after a collision with a Chinese fighter over the South China Sea

The talks were centered on the captured American crew, which administration officials insisted should be released both on legal and humanitarian grounds.

Still, a senior U.S. official said there was no assurance the crew would be released. He predicted a second busy night of diplomacy.

"Our message to the Chinese is, we should not let this incident destabilize relations. Our relationship with China is very important. But they need to realize that it's time for our people to be home." Bush said.

"I regret that a Chinese pilot is missing, and I regret one of their airplanes is lost. And our prayers go out to the pilot and his family. Our prayers are also with our own servicemen and women and they

In using the word "regret," Bush followed the language that has been used by other American officials, including Secretary of State Colin Powell

The United States has declined to apologize for the mishap, despite Chinese demands.

In the meantime, a senior U.S. official said, the Chinese had questioned the American crew. This became known to American diplomats when they met with the crew earlier in the week, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"In terms of what we're discussing, I think we continue to make the point that these people. the air crew, need to be released," State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said.

Asked whether there were any circumstances under which he would offer an apology to the Chinese, and whether he was reconsidering his planned trip to China in October, Bush said: "I have no further comments on this subject.

"We're working all diplomatic channels to effect our priority." Bush added. "There are discussions going on, and we'll continue to do

Earlier, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said it was important to resolve this matter quickly, satisfactorily.

"There is intensive diplomacy" under way, Boucher said.

The administration appeared more optimistic of a resolution of the crisis Thursday than it had the day before. Two high administration officials, who declined to be identified by name, said things looked brighter.

Fraternity pairings planned social events after the announcements so the new groups to begin to meet one another. The social events were planned because some houses expressed concern that a random selection process would enable the houses to bond from the beginning. Vogel said.

Nick Garner, Sigma Chi Homecoming chairman, said he thinks the new selection process will not solve past problems.

"I think any way you do Homecoming, there is some house that is unhappy," Garner, sophomore in public relations, said. "Having both big houses and small houses, it's hard to satisfy all people."

Baseball looks to end skid at OSU

By DAN SMITH Kansas State Collegian

Things won't get any easier for K-State's baseball team this weekend in Stillwater, Okla. The Cats will try to end a four-game skid and improve on a dismal 3-12 record in the conference against No. 22 Oklahoma State.

For head coach Mike Clark, this weekend's philosophy is simple forget about what's happened so far this season and find something that works.

"We've got to go down there and figure out a way to win some ball games," he said. "We can't put it off too much later. Each time we put a game in the loss column, it means we've got to sweep people and do other things."

While a K-State sweep of the Cowboys (24-10, 8-7) sounds great, the prospect of a three-game streak against OSU is not likely. The Cats never have taken a series from the Cowboys in Stillwater but Clark said there's a first time for everything.

"Oklahoma State is a tough place to play," he said, "but if we continue to improve, get a couple of breaks and start doing some things, we can win there. We just have to make some things happen, and now is the time to make them happen."

After collecting just seven hits in an 11-3 loss to Oral Roberts at Frank Myers Field on Wednesday to drop K-State's record to 11-18 overall, Clark said he was concerned with his hitters' approach at the plate after falling behind in the count.

Too many times, as we're going through an at-bat, we stay in fastball rhythm instead of making the adjustment with two strikes. and that's where our problem is. We're hitting the breaking pitch for the ground ball double-play."

After hitting into four twinkillings and stranding five base runners against the Golden Eagles, an improvement in RBI situations will be important as well if K-State is to be successful this weekend in Stillwater, Senior Josh Cavender said a change in mentality might be the right medicine for the Cats' recent struggles from the plate.

"The mindset is everyone needs to go out there and have fun like we're all capable of," he said, "Like Coach stressed, everyone that's here on scholarship is good enough to have a uniform on, and now we just have to show pride and give 110 percent every time.

K-State will need to have a better showing on the mound as well, and with Luke Robertson, Kevin Melcher and Brock Smith expected to start this weekend against the Cowboys, the Cats-should find more consistency in that area.

Robertson (4-4, 5.79 ERA) takes the mound in game one looking to bounce back from a rocky outing in Waco, Texas last weekend against Baylor where the junior gave up 10 runs in 5 1/3 innings of work.

Baylor will counter with Josh Merrigan (4-4, 3.99 ERA). First pitch is scheduled for 6 tonight from Allie P. Reynolds Stadium.

omen's golf coach Kristi Knight probably expected great things when she signed Christine Boucher last spring. After all, Boucher had dominated junior tournaments in her Boucher officially had committed to K-State and won the Women's Western Junior Championship, however, that Knight realized just how talented her new freshman was.

"That's one of the biggest junior events there is, and she won it, and she had to beat some pretty good players to do it.' Knight said. "Obviously, when I signed her in April, I thought she could play, but then when I got to see her win that tournament in July, I thought, 'Wow, she's really good."

Boucher only increased her coach's admiration when she arrived at K-State. In just her first meet, the freshman set K-State's all-time lowest score in a women's 54-hole tournament at the Alltell Husker Invitational last September.

That result still might have surprised some, but not sophomore Elise Carpentier, who also hails from Quebec. In fact, she actually encouraged Knight to sign Boucher. "Last year, Kristi asked me a little bit about Christine, and I told her how good a player she was and she would probably help the ream for sure, which did happen, Carpentier said. "She's helping us a lot."

Now, the Quebecoise duo of Boucher have led K-State to what could be its best season

ever. Boucher own 54-hole record at the broke her

GTE

Mo'Morial Tournament on March 6, and in the team's three meets this spring. Boucher and Carpentier have each won one,

Perhaps the greatest trait shown by both players is the ability to score well when they're not shooting the ball well.

"That's the big thing in golf because there's going to be a lot of days where you're not hitting it very good but you have to figure out how to score, how to get it in the hole," Knight said. "The very good players can score even though they might not be hitting it very well. That's something that those two have.'

While Knight certainly can claim some credit for the pair's success, her coaching has been made easier by the high level of play Carpentier and Boucher gained back home.

They both, in Canada, received excellent coaching as juniors. That gives them. I won't say an advantage, but it helps them. Elise works with a swing coach in Canada that she has for years, so she's been well coached, and the same with Christine." Knight said. "For me, I try to support them and help them any way I can here. They're kind of a college coach's dream.

That dream could get better if the pair leads K-State to its first appearance at the regional tournament, which takes the top 21 teams in the region.

> "The ultimate goal for the team this year would be the regional. It would be real nice," Carpentier said. "We still have to do pretty good in the next two events that we still have in from of us, but the ultimate goal for the team is the regionals, and that would be chance, however, that the team could get nervous and damage its chances of qualifying for regionals with a bad tournament. performance. It's possible, but unlikely, as Boucher and Carpentier tend to keep the mood rather light. Knight said.

"Christine's the more talkative of the two. Elise is quiet, but she has a great sense. of humor. Both of them laugh a lot," she said. "They like to play jokes, and that is good for the rest of the team. Trips are usually entertaining with those two.

"They're both silly, kind of pranksters." Knight should know, as she was the object of a Carpentier classic last spring.

"On an airplane. I started tossing ice at Elise. She never suspected it was me, Knight said. "She found out when we found out where we were going that it was me tossing ice over the seat, so she told me for about a month, look out for Elise's revenge."

That revenge came several months later

"I back out of my garage - I've got one tree in my front yard - and it is filled with panties and bras. I just started laughing," Knight said. "So I get to my office and I knew who had done it - Elise.

"That's what happens when you throw ice at Flise, just fun stuff like that. Team chemistry is good, and those two are a big part of it."

The other players aren't safe, either. Since both Boucher and Carpentier's native tongue is French, Carpentier often uses that to her advantage

"She's always joking around," Boucher said. "She'll say the name of somebody on the team, and she's talking in French. It kind of gets their attention."

As a result of the pair's attitudes and performances, the team stands a decent chance at making regionals. But it won't just be Boucher and Carpentier leading the way, though. Odds are, that the entire team will come through.

"Instead of betting on individual players, I'd bet on the team," Carpentier said, "Bet on K-State. You've got some great players out here."

Rankings in most sports mean a lot, but head tennis coach Steve Bietau said the Intercollegiate Tennis Association rankings might not mean much for a while.

The rankings, which recently have been changed from human voters to computer rankings, are in the process of being restructured to position teams more accurately, leaving teams like K-State wondering where they stand in the grand scheme of things this season.

They were in the hands of a committee up until late February or early March," Bietau said

"They switched it over to the computer thing, and as you might expect, when you make a change like that, people move because you essentially have two systems. It almost takes a couple cycles before things start to make sense."

After being ranked as high as No. 44 following the Cats' March 10 win over Texas Tech, K-State plummeted to as low as No. 74 for its matches against conference foes Colorado and Nebraska last weekend.

So when then-No. 39 Nebraska came to Ahearn Field House for what should have been a gimme set with the Cats, ITA computers were left with fizzled hard drives after K-State handed the Huskers a 4-3 upset loss April Fool's Day.

Yet, if Bietau had any practical jokes planned for early April, it was obvious they wouldn't be played out on the tennis court. K-State was all business in its matches against the Huskers and Buffaloes, handling Nebraska just one day after a 6-1 win over Colorado to run its current winning streak to three straight.

awesome."

There's always that

Those wins were enough to push the Cats back up to No. 44 for this weekend's action against Missouri and Kansas, but Bietau is quick to point out that rankings don't matter until the end of the season.

"I don't get real excited about it because rankings are a publicity tool," he said. "Fans tend to be more interested in them than we are. What's important to us is, we give the system something to work with as time goes on."

The Cats' recent success can be directly related to consistency both in practice and during the match, junior Alena Jecminkova

"We're definitely more consistent in pretty much every game," she said. "We performed pretty well in the tiebreakers against Colorado, and I think that says a lot about where we're at right now." K-State will look to give that system a little more to work with this weekend in Columbia on Saturday and Lawrence on Sunday when Jecminkova, the Big 12's Player of the Week, and company look to extend their hot streak.

Considering all aspects of photographers and photography studios is an important part in capturing the special event.

It is not as difficult as it seems to find a photographer, and a couple can find one in many different places, said Dan Donnert, owner of Donnert Photography. and director of K-State Photo

"Couples usually seek a photographer through the phone book, word of mouth, at other weddings attended or seeing previous examples from a photography studio's work displayed in a mall or bridal shop," he said.

Loree Lewandowski, junior in psychology, has just started looking into photographers for her wedding next year.

"I want someone who can do good indoor and outdoor pictures," she said. "I want someone who can take pictures without the shadows and red

When looking into photographers, their reputation, price and personality must fit the criteria a couple wants, Donnert said.

"Make sure you can relate well and you like the guy's personality. because you are going to be working with them all day long," he said. "You shouldn't hire them if you don't enjoy their company.' Reputation is another crucial

"It can't hurt to ask for referrals - it's important," he said.

As for the price of wedding photos, there might be different rates to consider.

1st performer returns to celebrate BirdHouse

Six candles will grace the cake served at the BirdHouse concert series Saturday as the Manhattan Arts Center celebrates the series' anniver-

The birthday of the series will be celebrated with thirdtime returning performer Brooks Williams, Williams was the first performer to grace the BirdHouse series six years

"We love Brooks," David Kamerer, BirdHouse organizer, said. "We wanted something special for our sixth birthday, so we decided to invite him to play again."

Brooks Williams

Brooks Williams will perform at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center as part of the BirdHouse concert series. Tickets are $8 in advance and $10 at the door

The concert also will feature jazz finger-style guitarist Bret Boyer in the opening set and Williams in the main set. BirdHouse organizer Steve Martini said one reason Williams was invited to play was because of his excellent performances in the past,

"Over the years, he has become a great singer. songwriter and instrumen-

Although Williams was initially invited to visit Manhattan, he said every time he passes through, he calls to check and see if there are any open performance

"Manhattan rates right upthere with some of the best locations," he said, "The crowd is usually pretty big fans of guitar music, and I have found that Kansas audiences are generally pretty guitar savvy.

Williams has been playing the guitar for about 33 years and performing for about 13 years. He said he always wanted to be a musician, but "I was into music, but I think it really chose me." Williams said, "It was just a matter of time before I got around to doing it." The BirdHouse concert series is designed to bring acoustic musicians into the Manhattan area. The artists usually are down-to-earth people and overall quality musicians, Martini said.

Williams' music combines acoustic guitar, blues and jazz. Williams said he wants to do something different with music by creating a new genre including original music, instrumental music and songs by other artists.

"There is so much crosspollination going on in music, and I am a part of that," he said. "I have a brand new album out right now. 'Skiffle-Bop', that makes a real good statement to where my music is right now.

Williams said the best part about performing is getting to do the thing he loves to do the most. He said he enjoys the informal atmosphere of the concerts he plays.

"I like to play in small venues where I can develop an intimacy with the audience," he said. "I can get immediate feedback. It is a real kick because it is almost like a conversation."

Royal harpist to give classical performance in Manhattan

By BETSY STVERAK

Kansas State Collegian

Internationally known harpist Catrin Finch was chosen at 19 for the position of royal harpist to the Prince of Wales. Now, at 20, she is touring the United States

A native of Wales, Finch will perform at 8 tonight at All Faiths Chapel. The performance will include a variety of pieces, said Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer of McCain Auditorium.

"She will perform pieces by many different composers such as Bach, Debussy, Britten and Goss," Jackson said.

The first time Finch saw a harp being plucked, she knew she wanted to play, she said.

"At 5 years old, my parents took me to see a harpist play," she said. "By the age of 6, I was practicing every day."

Finch said her hard practicing and dedicated playing has earned her fantastic privileges in life.

"I got to play for the Prince of Wales at his 50th birthday party." she said. "The next thing I knew. I was appointed to perform for Prince Charles permanently. It is a brilliam honor, and I love it." The harp is not just another instrument to Finch. It's her life, she said.

"I love everything about it." she said. "The way it sounds, how it looks and how graceful it is. I live for it.

Finch said the barp stands

"It's in a world of its own," she said. " I think its strongest point is how diverse it is from other instruments."

Finch played another instrument for a short time, which helped her find her talent, she Tknew that I had an interest in music, so I began playing the piano," she said. "It encouraged me to progress into playing the harp."

During her visit to Manhattan, Finch will perform at Amanda Arnold Elementary. Northview Elementary School and Bluemont Elementary School. Finch said she will teach the children small workshops and then performing.

"I will describe the art of playing, show how the harpworks and then play for the students," she said. "I hope this will give the children a broad outlook on the instrument." Christine Duffy, secretary at Amanda Arnold, said they eagerly are awaiting Finch's arrival. "She is supposed to perform for one-half hour," she said. "We are very excited and feel it is an honor to have her here." Finch said her performance at All Faiths will be exhilarating as well as educational.

"Many people have not heard this instrument, so it will be something new," she said. "People are pleasantly surprised about what the harp is capable

EVAN SEMÓN/Collegian Chris Faulkner, sophomore in business administration, has been snow boarding for nine years. Faulkner spent his snow day Friday snow boarding off hay-bale ramps at CICo Park in Manhattan. Faulkner is leading a group of students in conjunction with the Union Program Council to Crested Butte, Colo., over spring break.

Kansas State Collegian

Students organizing the All-University Open House hope the memories they once made on the annual day will be passed on to potential K-State students this weekend.

Missy McVicker, College of Human Ecology student Open House chairwoman, said when she came to Open House as a senior in high school, she left knowing that she wanted to become involved in K-State organizations.

"I remember coming up and being completely overwhelmed with the big campus," said McVicker, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management. "Then I talked to different organizations in the Union and walked around to see what K-State had to offer. Everyone was so excited about K-

State, and that's what sold me." Coordinating all the Human Ecology events for this year's Open House is something McVicker decided to do because she wanted to give something back to the college, she said.

"It's the one day where I can help K-State showcase all we have."

Aprill Sherman, College of Veterinary Medicine student Open House chairwoman, said she remembers realizing how involved K-State students were with their colleges when she visited Open

"People can talk one-on-one with us and see how we really are," Sherman said.

She said the surgery demonstration videos in the veterinary hospital and tours of the building impressed her during Open House. Listening to everyone who walks through the K-State Student Union during Open House is what Jenny Ziegler, student coordinator for Open House, said she enjoys most about helping with Open House. "Everybody talks about what's going on, and there's lots of excited kids," said Ziegler, fifth-year architectural engineering student. "And it's neat to hear alumni say 'Oh, I remember doing that."

In past years, Ziegler has been the student life Open House coordinator, and this year she won't be able to observe the events in the Union.

She said she's excited for high school students to see the highlights of every college.

"This has more actual hands-on events, rather than just talking to someone on a visit. Everyone gets an actual, physical picture," Ziegler said. "They can see things that they'll have the opportunity to do if they decide to come to school here."

Konza Prairie to be featured on PBS

For five years, the Inland Sea Productions crew have been engaged in the production of a documentary about the Konza

"Last Stand of the Tallgrass Prairie," hosted by Lyle Lovett and narrated by Michael Murphy, premiers at 8 p.m. April 20 on PBS. A free advanced showing of the program will be shown Saturday during K-State's All-University Open House.

K-State professors of biology Alan Knapp, John Blair and David Hartnett played a vital role in this project. "The producers of the film -John Altman and Aimee Larrabee asked us to serve as Konza Prairie will be featured on PBS. There will be a free advanced showing at 10 a.m., 1 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. Saturday in the Union Little Theater.

The site has an unparalleled 28year history of research and some of the longest datasets on ecological processes in tallgrass prairie.

K-State professors have worked on the documentary production from its onset.

Because there are so many different research projects going on at Konza Prairie, one issue that had to be resolved early in the process was to decide which research results to include and highlight in the film, Knapp said.

"When we began, it was going to be an aesthetic documentary about the complex beauty of the prairie, which is not always recognized. especially by people who have not grown up around it." Altman said in a press release. "Then we learned about the scientific research that was going on at Konza Prairie. Biological Station and what tremendous ramifications it had."

So the professors' expertise on grasslands found real-life application in this documentary.

"In addition to on- and offcamera interviews, we worked with the producers on the scientific content of the script," Blair said. "We also allowed the film crew to follow us as we conducted research in the field and carried out some of the large-scale operations such as burning."

Altman said the goal was to show how the land was used.

"We wanted to show how Native Americans and ranchers have listened to the prairie and learned the rhythms of the land," Aliman said in the press release. "They knew they had to burn the prairie to preserve it."

It blends science, history and sociology, Knapp said.

The professors said they hope this documentary will raise public awareness about the value of grassland ecosystems, both locally and globally.

Blair said most people do not appreciate the biodiversity or the essential ecosystem services provided by these grasslands or how it's been affected by human activity. This film should provide a broader appreciation of the prairie and of the research it offers, Blair said.

Artist to give sculpting demonstrations in Seaton Hall

Making sand sculptures more than 5 feet tall is nothing out of the ordinary for Dan Belcher.

years, since he graduated from

On Thursday, he brought in supplies to create a sculpture about 5 feet tall - a relatively small sculpture, he said. He hasn't yet decided what he is going to sculpt.

"I like to keep it open, so I can be creative as I go along," he

He began unloading materials Thursday afternoon and plans to begin sculpting today. He will continue throughout Open House and end shortly before 3

While he normally constructs the sculpture completely out of sand, this one will have a styrofoam core and sand sculpted on top of it.

This is because the sand he prefers to use, he has to bring from St. Louis, Mo., where he currently lives.

The sculpture will be constructed and displayed in the Pierce Atrium of Seaton Hall.

Not only is the College of Architecture, Planning and Design displaying a sculpture, but the College of Human Ecology is as well. Their sculpture is not out of sand, however. It is out of ice.

Several sculptures will be displayed - one at the K-State Student Union Plaza that is being carved Friday and two created by demonstrations outside of Justin Hall on Saturday.

Demonstrations will be at 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Carol Kellet, dean of the College of Human Ecology, said the sculptures will be done completely by two or three students.

Those in the Department of Hotel and Restaurant

Management will be doing the carving.

'We have a couple of students that have done it over the years, and they are pretty good," Pat Pesci, director of the department

The students most likely will sculpt the letters K-S-U for their two demonstrations, Pesci said.

He also said the students have learned the trade all on their own - K-State does not offer a course in ice sculpting. However, the school does have all the tools they will need for the demonstra-

"It's quite interesting because they actually use a chainsaw to do the rough shaping," he said.

The blocks of ice weigh about 300 pounds each and take about 2 hours each to carve.

"It's not a few minute project," he said, "it takes a while to do."

While the students are carving, there will be an open-air cafe available. "It will be a good opportunity for people to just come out and watch," he said.

Cannon to shoot T-shirts in Salina

By CAMILLE BOISSEAU Kansas State Collegian

The question was how to get the K-State-Salina campus involved with K-State football games. The solution was the Cat Cannon.

Bob Henning, sophomore in mechanical engineering technology, designed the Cat Cannon. It was used at three K-State home football games last fall by Willie the Wildcat to project Tshirts into the upper levels of KSU Henning will give a Cat Cannon presentation and demonstration at 11 a.m. Saturday in the Technology Center at the Salina campus.

Henning had been interested in paintball guns when he started the idea for the cannon as a project in one of his classes.

To achieve this idea, Henning applied the concepts from his classes to construct the cannon.

Henning and Greg Spaulding. assistant professor of mechanical engineering, worked together on the project.

"We did calculations to find the velocity the T-shirt had to have to exit the cannon to allow it to reach the upper deck. Then the pressures and length of the barrel could be calculated to achieve that velocity," Spaulding said.

The cannon uses pressurized air to launch an object upward. Because of the force pushing the object through the barrel, the object's velocity is greater once outside of the barrel, and the angle of the cannon predicts the height and distance of the object. "Part of the design concept was to use off-the-shelf components," Spaulding said.

It is constructed using PVC pipe, lawn sprinkler valves and wood. This way of construction was used rather than fabricating complex custom components. This project took Henning about 100 man hours to finish.

As part of the All-University Open House demonstration, Henning plans to launch T-shirts throughout the day. He also will be demonstrating a parachute he has been working on for the T-shirts.

"I want to basically show off my design," Henning said.

Henning has some plans for the Cat Cannon. Plans are in the works for the cannon to launch T-shirts at Country Stampede this summer.

Spaulding said he expects the cannon to remain at home football games, and he'll look for other events where it might be used.

"I also want to continue to refine and improve the design," Spaulding said.

Gary Funk, head of the manufacturing lab, said he believes the project was a success.

"Henning's project exceeded my expectations of his project," Funk

Volleyball squad gets 2nd chance against Badgers

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

Four months ago, K-State's volleyball team reached the Sweet 16 for the first time in school history.

Wisconsin knocked the Cats out of the tournament and eventually advanced to the championship game, where the Badgers lost to Nebraska.

At 2 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House, K-State ranked No. 20 in Volleyball magazine's preseason poll, will get a second chance at No. 17 Wisconsin in the Cats' first spring scrimmage.

After losing two seniors, K-State has holes to fill, but the different lineup actually is an advantage against the Badgers, senior outside hitter Liz Wegner sald.

"I'm really looking forward to this weekend. I think we can do some really great things and kind of be a different team than what we finished

"The identity of the team will change as we put this team together."

Jim McLaughlin, head coach with," she said, "and I don't know if they're going to be ready for that.

"I think we're just more steady all across. We have more leadership throughout the court.'

While the players are optimistic about the team's improvement in the first three weeks of spring drills, head coach Jim McLaughlin remains cautiously optimistic. His team, especially the chemistry, still has preparation to do before it's ready for next season.

"We're not a solid unit yet. We're still fragmented in some ways, and that's going to take some time to get together," he said. "The identity of the team will change as we put this team

A plus for K-State is that four seniors with game experience will lead the way. However, even that experience is no sure bonus for success, McLaughlin said.

"We have a lot of people that have been through some competitive situations, but just because that's happened doesn't mean we're going to be good," he said. "We're finding out about how good we're going to be right now as we train every day. This team is developing its identity."

The first test of that identity will be Saturday, but no matter the result, playing a quality opponent will make K-State a better team, McLaughlin

"We have one of the top teams in the country coming to Manhattan. We think that's a positive," he said. "The better the team, the better for us."

However, the men's crew is hoping for some support this weekend when the University of Kansas and Wichita State University will meet K-State for the Sunflower Championships at 12:30 p.m. Saturday at Tuttle Creek

The regatta, which travels to each school's home waters on a three-year cycle, is the K-State

Rowing Association's first chance to compete in this year's spring sprints season, and this allows the crew to get back into the swing of things after a short winter break.

Still, the prospect of beating a rival in any sport is enough to get the adrenaline going, Tracy said.

"It's our first race of the year. We're just trying to get into the water and see how we're feeling in actual race situations. Hopefully we'll win it because I hate losing to KU," Tracy said.

"I think we've got some good boats this year. We seem to be coming together great. We should have a pretty decent team this year and give a lot of crews a run for their money.

Captain Chris Hornbostel said the regatta helps the crew get some much needed exposure in Manhattan.

"It's really good for our program to have a race here because our funding everything," Hornbostel, senior in pre-nursing, said.

"This gives us a chance to reach out to the community and help ourselves out as well. When we get more people out here, they want to contribute and get involved."

Varsity men's coach Jim Barnard agreed and said it's a good chance to analyze his team's early season

"It's a good opportunity to showcase what we can do as a club," he said. "This is the first time that we've hosted a race in a couple of years, so it's a good chance to see what kind of speed we've got so far. Everyone's looking forward to going out and having some fun.

"It's our state championships, so the real competitiveness comes from trying to stay on top of those crews like we have the last couple of years. There's some rivalry

Open House opportunity for all ages to visit university

On Saturday, K-State will be host to its annual All-University Open House. The Open House will start at 9 a.m. and run until 3 p.m. While this might only be a six-hour period, the opportunity could be one that is beneficial for a lifetime.

Many people have made the journey to Manhattan from their respected homes and communities on the first weekend of April, rain or shine, to see this spectacle we call Open House. But what really is Open House?

For most high school seniors, Open House is their first and maybe only K-State experience, but what a great experience to have!

I remember my first Open House nearly 3 years ago. Man. how the times fly and things change.

This year, check out the new TV documentary about the Konza Prairie that will be nationally televised on PBS. This documentary will be shown at 10 a.m., 1 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. in the newly renovated Union Little Theatre, but this is not all that Open House features.

Since the end of September, there have been people starting on. making plans for and beginning a process that is going to take place this Saturday. When I say people, I am not talking about 10 to 20. Here is a quick list of the personal commitment to making this weekend a success:

■ All nine colleges, which offer 200 academic majors and career

Administration staff that range from the dean of student life and his office to Student Publications and News Services to the K-State Union Bookstore.

■ Every one of the nearly 400 campus organizations and clubs. An Open House core committee, which I am lucky to be

It is the hope of all these people that you are able to take full advantage of this great opportunity that presents itself Saturday.

Over the course of these past six months that Open House has been constructed, it has been the goal of everyone involved to make this a great experience for all

From the youngest of K-Staters to our most valued alumni. Open House has something to target the whole family. Where else could you see tight rope walking rats to sumowrestling robots? Take a break by playing lawn croquet or petting your favorite animal at a petting zoo. And if you are hungry, enjoy K-State doughnuts, bread or ice cream.

Parking is plentiful, and a shuttle service will be available to take you to all corners of campus. Tours of the campus also will be offered throughout the day. And for the person who might be feeling lost, we have volunteers who cannot wait to help you. Do not worry because you cannot miss them. They will be the ones wearing the "LOST VOLUNTEER" T-Shirts. And if all that is not enough, then just follow one of the many signs or cat paws on the ground to the destination you desire.

While the main objective stands at providing an overall image of K-State for people who do not know much about the university, the people who could get the most out of Open House are current K-State students. Before I got involved in the planning of Open House, I was a participant. By the first weekend of April my freshman year, I was more confused about this experience we call college. I had come to K-State having grown up always wanting to be a doctor, but by now, being a doctor was the farthest thing my mind.

College was taking its grasp on me, and I was trying to answer the million-dollar question. What am I going to do with the rest of my life? The answer was as big and simple as two words: Open House. It was at Open House that year that I found clubs to get involved in and a major to claim. I used my time to get more knowledge about K-State and what it has to offer to me. Even over the last three years while helping out with Open House, I have been able to expand myself even further into the vast pool of knowledge that this university has to offer.

I encourage everyone to at least set foot on campus to find out for yourselves what Open House is really about. I guarantee that we can find something similar to what you were looking for. And if you are having trouble, stop by the information booth in the K-State Student Union, and I personally will help you. That is our commit? ment to you. Hope to see you Saturday.

Open House gives peek at greeks

By LYNNE HERMANSEN Kansas State Collegian

Students considering joining a K-State fraternity or sorority will soon be given the opportunity to have a glimpse into greek

The All-University Open House Saturday will be a perfect time for anyone to have their questions answered about K-State's greek system.

The Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils will have informational booths set up in the K-State Student Union with material for students to learn about each of the fraternities and sororities. Each house will be available to answer questions and will also be available all day for public visits.

"People will be able to drop in and tour the houses throughout the day," said Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs.

Abbie Hunt, junior in public relations, said she believes having informational booths at Open House is a great opportunity for incoming freshmen.

"A lot of people don't know about the greek system." she said. 'Freshmen can get a look, learn about rush, look at each house, and it gives them a better idea of what everything is about.

The Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority will not be participating in open house this year because of its limited budget.

"We have always done it in the past, but because we just put an expansion on our house, we are unable to take part," she said. "We would like to be able to again next year, though."

Theta Xi fraternity and the Pi Beta Phi sorority will also be raising funds for the Multiple Sclerosis Foundation on Saturday

We will also have a power cat, where Bill Snyder is going to put quarters down." Lindsey Allen, junior in marketing, said,

The quarters are from donations made by businesses all over Manhattan and other greek houses. Certain quarters in the mile will mark a spot.

'A person that finds one of these quarters will receive a prize such as a candy bar," Allen said. Various games for children will be set up.

The Miracle Mile project has raised between $2,000 and $3,000 in previous years. lared Rose, Theta Xi president, said a mile of quarters is approximately $15,000. "We probably will not reach that but we would like to try." he KMKF-FM 101.5 will be there to broadcast the event.

Rose said the Theta Xi fraternity decided to take part in the project because it felt the need to get involved and give back more to the community

Expo 2001 to show off area business, activities

By COLLEEN FOOTE Kansas State Collegian

The 12th annual all-in-one home, business and outdoors show offers a variety of activities for people of all of ages. "There will be a little bit of something for everybody at this year's expo," said Tina Harland, of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

"Each year we try to make it a little bigger and a little better than the year before.

More than 200 exhibits will be on display for Expo 2001. The home show is sponsored by the Manhattan Area Builders Association, and the Chamber of Commerce sponsors the business and outdoor show. Expo will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is free.

An activity new to this year's expo is a casting contest. Contestants will have the chance to a win a boat and a wave

On Saturday, kids will have the chance to participate in a tractor pull from 1 to 4 p.m. The Manhattan Fire Department will give demonstrations on fire safety and provide rides on a fire engine Sunday.

The Brandenberry Indoor Complex will feature the home improvement displays.

people to tour.

The business displays will be on the concourse of Bramlage Coliseum, and the outdoors show will take place on the main floor of Bramlage.

Donna Altobello, vice president of Bear Computers, said her company chose to participate in the expo because it is a great opportunity for the community.

"We've been a part of the expofor the past four years, and we've always had a good response from the community," Altobello said. "This is a great way to meet people in the community, and it is also a great way to see how Manhattan is growing."

Bear Computer plans on displaying a demonstration computer, and they will be introducing computer engraving during the expo.

It's a wonderful opportunity for everyone in the community to see services offered here in Manhattan," she said.

Dogs on display at Vet Med

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Kansas State Collegian The dogs will be out in full force for the All-University Open House on Saturday, at least in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The college will feature a Kansas Specialty Dog service at 10 a.m. and search and rescue dogs at noon. April Sherman, third-year student in veterinary medicine, said it will be part of the day's activities.

"We have speakers every hour of the day, but this is the first year we have had search and rescue dogs at the open house," Sherman said. "It is a good way to get the service and rescue dogs known to the public."

The dogs are equipped in a variety of skills and work in different capacities and positions, including searching for missing persons in crisis situations like earthquakes or bombings. They also help search if a human being happens to wander off, Sherman said.

The Open House activities also will have specialty dogs, said Denise Oliver, executive director of Midwest Canine Assistants Inc. KSDS Guide and Service Dogs. The dogs are meant to give the general public an opportunity to see what skills the center teaches the dogs.

The center trains black Labrador, gold Labrador and Golden Retrievers from when they are eight weeks old throughout the first year. On Saturday, the dogs will be demonstrating their skills and interacting with people through activities such as walking and jogging.

Working with the dogs and people can be a challenge. It can be a case of making the right match with a dog and an owner.

Canines trained at the center can do everything from guiding a person in need to helping a person take their jackets on and off. Oliver said the individual needs typically are different.

Working with the dogs and people also can be a challenge. It can be a case of making the right match with a dog and an owner. Owners typically enter into the center for a stay of 14 to 21 days.

"There is an instance to rematch, so to speak," Oliver said. "If it doesn't work well, we try, try and try again."

College to offer information on mad cow, foot-and-mouth diseases to community

Kansas State Collegian

The College of Veterinary Medicine is offering public information on mad cow and foot-andmouth diseases during the All-University Open House. The college will also be taking special precautions.

A panel discussion will be at 3 p.m. Saturday in the Frick Auditorium of Mosier Hall. Don Seedle, professor of veterinary medicine public health, was selected as one of the panelists. He said the prevalence of the diseases in the media, and possible confusion they might create, was the primary reason for the discussion.

Fraternity and sererity membership helps keep students in college

Students who belong to a fraternity or sorority are more likely to sty in college than other students. A study by the Center for Advancement Social Research at the University of Missouri-Columbia found fraternity or sorority membership increased student retention by about 28% as compared with the results that would be expected by "chance."

Alumni members achieve success

College graduates who belong to a fraternity or sorority tend to be more successful financially than other college graduates. After factoring in the effects of parents' education level, the Center found Greek affiliation correlated positively with higher incomes.

Also, a US Department of Education reports that less than 2% of a college student's expenses go to Greek membership dues, so a little cost increase sees later results.

Fraternity and sererity alumni give more to alma maters

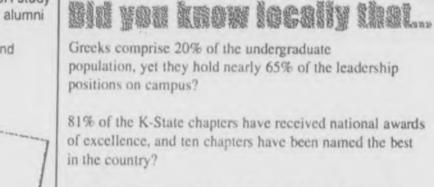

Colleges receive more gifts-and in greater amounts-from fraternity and sorority alumni, research shows. In one study, 22% of members from the 1945 and 1955 era eras gave their alma maters $500 to $1,000 in 1996. Four percent of other alumni made comparable gifts. Eleven percent of member alumni gave $1,000 to $5,000 versus 1.4% among non-Greek members.

Sisters and brothers more active in campus, community activities

Student members tend to participate more fully in extracurricular campus activitiesincluding, of course, their membership in their chapter-than do other students. Fraternity and sorority members also nurture their "social capital"-involvement in the community-in later years. A CASR study indicated that 1965-1994 era Greek alumni took part more fully in volunteer organizations, charitable activities and non-profits than did others.

Student commits suicide; many witness tragedy

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas State Collegian

K-State students, faculty and staff are coping with the news of the death of a student early Saturday morning.

Andrew Charles "Drew" Cobb II, sophomore in graphic design, died of injuries sustained after he jumped from an eighthstory window of Haymaker Hall at 7 p.m. Friday. He immediately was rushed to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue, where he underwent surgery. At 2 a.m. Saturday, Director of Media Relations Cheryl May released a statement, saying Cobb had died early that morning.

At the time of Cobb's suicide attempt, there were many people outside; thus, there were numerous witnesses, including Jimmy Nolan, freshman in accounting, who was in his friend's room at the time.

"I saw him standing out on the ledge, holding onto the window sill," Nolan said. "It looked like he was talking to someone for about 10 minutes.

"After that, he took his hands off the window sill, stood there for about 10 seconds, and then he just leaned

The Riley County Police Department. the fire department and an ambulance were at the scene before Cobb jumped. Nolan said.

Vicki Livingood, emergency room supervisor at Mercy Health Center, said Cobb had suffered from internal injuries and blunt trauma to the chest.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, expressed his grief and condolences over the tragedy.

"My heartfelt sympathy goes out to Drew's family and friends," Bosco said. "He truly will be missed."

Carla Jones, associate dean of student life, said a main priority right now is helping those dealing with the grieving

"We're here to help the students," she Immediately after the incident, campus counselors, ministers and priests were available to help counsel those who were witness to the incident or those who knew Cobb. The counseling sessions continued throughout the day and into the evening Saturday and Sunday. Walk-in sessions are encouraged this week at Lafene Health Center's University Counseling Services, said Ion Ulven, UCS counselor.

Ulven said that throughout the weekend, the reactions of those who came to see him have varied.

"I've seen lots of shock and people feeling numb," he said. "There's been anger, sadness and a feeling of being removed from the situation.

"All of these feelings are valid. They shouldn't be shelved away."

Bosco said, however, there is no one way to react to such an incident, and that everyone can learn from it.

"There's no cookbook-recipe reaction," he said. "It's important that we take a little collective breath and become better

Ulven and Derek Jackson, director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said they are appreciative of the way in which the residence hall staff has handled Cobb's death.

"The staff worked to handle this well. There's been a tremendous outpouring of support and sympathy," Ulven said.

Bar cited for alcohol violations

By JENNIFER O'NEILL Kansas State Collegian

Longhorn's in Aggieville is under fire with four charges pending against the bar. Charges include serving alcohol to minors and violation of the county's food-sales

According to Scott Holeman, spokesman for Alcoholic Beverage Control, Longhorn's was cited on four violations, one being that the bar failed to maintain the county rule that 30 percent of gross sales must come

Toby Verstraete, owner of Longhorn's, said it's true that they are in violation of the county food requirement, but the bar is fighting some of the other charges.

"We're doing our part to make sure everything is OK," she said.

A hearing on the matter was scheduled for Wednesday, but the attorney for Longhom's requested a continuance Verstraete said she doesn't think the charges will affect her business or the bar's popularity, and she said she doesn't understand the necessity of the county regulation.

"The whole 30-percent rule is outrageous. It's too high," she said. "All the bar owners need to meet and somehow get this Verstraete said she thinks the rule eventually will have a negative effect on Aggieville.

"I'm not sure how a college town is supposed to meet that requirement when students don't go to these bars to eat," she

Douglas County, where the University of Kansas is located, doesn't have a food requirement, but Lyon County, home of Emporia State University, does have the 30percent food requirement.

Other bars in Manhattan have faced similar problems recently.

Clara Barton Charity Golf Tournament. The tournament, which was played at Colbert Hills Golf Course, cost tournament players $100 to enter, with all proceeds donated to charity. However, teams also were sponsored corporately at a cost of $500.

"It is great to be out here for the charity, and it is a great reason to play here," Bill Blackert, of Johnson County, Kan., said.

Blackert was one of the many golfers who had the opportunity to compete for individual prizes, and team prizes of first, second and third. The first place team received $400, $200 to the second and $100 to the third. Players also received lunch and a continental breakfast before play began.

Proceeds of the event went to the Fort Riley Disaster Relief Fund and the Riley County and Fort Riley Chapters of the American Red Cross, an organization that

Blood drive 128 units short of goal

By BENJAMIN HODGE Kansas State Collegian

The American Red Cross collected 722 units of blood for regional blood banks, thanks to the hundreds of K-State students who donated blood last week during the university's blood drive.

The drive at K-State missed its goal of 850 units. The Red Cross collected 866 units of blood last fall.

Stacey Huerter, student coordinator of the blood drive and junior in elementary education, has worked with the drive since her freshman year and said donations in the spring usually are lower than in the fall.

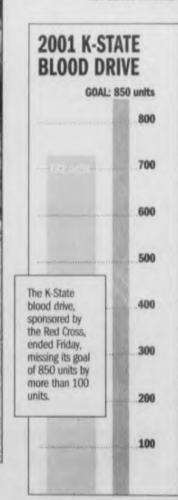

One of the obstacles in getting a large student turnout was that the drive took place directly after spring break, said Scott McFall, Phi Gamma

Budget shortfall restarts school finance debate

TOPEKA - News of a $185 million hole in the state's budget caused the StateBouse school finance debate to shift like winds on the Karisas prairie.

Hours after sending a two-year $263 million plan for improving elementary and secondary education back to committee, senators learned that the state's revenue outlook for the next 15 months is worse than bleak.

As a result, the school finance debate returned to where it started this session, with regislators home for the next two weeks, listening toraising taxes to improve education.

Legislators began their annual spring break Friday night, but the time away from the Statehouse will be anything but a break for members of the Senate Education

Officials hope to avoid further U.S.-China strain

WASHINGTON, D.C. - As the standoff over the detained crew of a downed American spy plane entered its second week, top Bush administration officials said Sunday a quick resolution was crucial to avoid further straining U.S.-China relations.

Continued delay in sending the 24 Americans home could have repercussions on Capitol Hill, said members of Congress, citing a possible trade fight later this year and an upcoming decision on U.S. weapons sales to Talwan.

The administration refused again to apologize for the collision between a Chinese fighter jet and the U.S. plane, which was forced to make an emergency landing on an island in southern China. The Chinese jet and its pilot are missing. Over the weekend, the Chinese military mok a lough stance on who was to blame.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said the United States was sorry about the pilot's fate as he used a word the administration generally has avoided. But he emphasized the United States should not and will not apologize for the collision of the Both Powell Vice President Dick Chency and the president's national security adviser, Condoleesza Rice, said an extended standoff threatened to make it harder to repair relations between the two countries.

"I don't want to put a timetable ou it. Every day that goes by without having it resolved raises the risks to the long-term relationship," Cheney said on NR.'s "Meet the Press." Administration officials were careful to avoid spelling our specific consequences of further delay.

Shifting from a diplomatic to personal level, the White House said the president was answering the missing pilot's distraught wife, who had written Bush and accused his administration of being too cowardly to offer an apology.

"The purpose of the letter is to respond in a humanitarian way, in an American way, to a widow who is grieving," Powell said on "Fox News Sunday. "Whatever you think about the politics of it, she's lost her husband."

Bush to release details of $1.96 trillion budget

WASHINGTON, D.C. - With President Bush preparing to release the point-by-point details of how his $1.96 trillion budget would rein in government spending. Vice President Dick Cheney said Sunday that Bush will not hesitate to veto spending bills he considers exces-Democrats, still celebrating an initial victory in trimming Bush's tax cut, awaited today's release of the request. "When people see the budget, they're going to say. 'Oh, my God, I wanted a tax cut, but I didn't know what you were going to do to health care and to Medicare and national defense," Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said on ABC's "This Week."

Chency defended the administrations budget decisions, arguing that spending has gotten out of control since 1998, when the first of a series of budget surpluses began.

Pies fly for charity

By SHANNON BURKDOLL Kansas State Collegian

Kurth Lancaster, junior in landscape architecture, took a shot at one of his professors in the Habitat for Humanity pie throw Saturday afternoon.

Lancaster questioned the consequences of the pie throw with his professor. Eric Bernard, before throwing the cream-filled plate.

Lancaster's throw missed Bernard.

"It tastes just great," Bernard, assistant professor of landscape architecture/recreational and commercial planning, said after a close call.

The K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity sponsored the first pie throw Saturday in the Union Plaza to raise student awareness and money for the House that K-State Built project.

The pie looked like whipped cream, but it was made of cornstarch, dish soap and water.

Dan Roche, sophomore in physical science and business administration, said 40 professors were nominated to be targets, and nine chose to participate in shifts throughout the day.

"We had every age." Roche said.
"Kids, college students and even their wives threw pies."

Ion Anderson, pre throw organizer and senior in construction science, said they had professors from the departments of Architecture, Political Science, Biology, Engineering and Constructional Science agree to be pie targets.

Joseph Unekis, associate professor of political science, challenged a class of 200 political science students to take a shot at him during the pie throw, he said.

"It's a good project," Unekis said. "I knew my students couldn't hit me, and none have."

Ksis Anupindi, who had taken a political science class before, tried to hit Unekis with a pie, but failed as well.

"One of my professors was like. Go ahead and try," Anupindi, junior in computer science, said, "so I did."

"I wasn't worried," Unekis said: "My students couldn't hit the broad side of a barn."

All-University Open House lures prospective students

Dozens of tables for K-State clubs, organizations and departments filled the K-State Student Union as early as 9 a.m., when Open House, to which the university has been host since 1979, officially began.

From the start,
prospective students and their families gathered up as much information as possible.

"It's been pretty busy for this early in the day," said Amy Bullet, freshman in pre-medicine and member of Delia Delia Delia Delia sorority. "We have a lot of interested people who want to know about the greek system and about college in general."

One of the more popular tables in the Union each year is that of Psi Chi, the National Honor Society for Psychology, and its famous tightrone-walking rats.

Sharol Warner, senior in psychology, said it is a display that draws children to the table.

"The kids love to play with the tats." she said. "They're good with the kids and well-behaved."

When students and their parents weren't staking up information in the Union, they were checking out the many events put on by the different colleges at k-State and their departments.

Jessica Tillett, senior in elemenlary education and member of the Council for Exceptional Children, was involved with the CEC's pupper show about disabled children. The show was sponsored by CEC and the College of Education, and Tillett said it, too, was a hands-on experience.

"We've set the puppets out for everyone to see before the show, and the kids have been interested and have been touching them," Tillett said.

Meanwhile, the College of Agriculture's Department of Entomology was preparing an insect feast in Waters Hall.

"We've got burrito rollups with worms and tortilla chips with salsa, guacamole and various insects on them." said David Friss, graduate student in entomology, who worked grabs to giggling passersby.

"My friends won't believe this when I tell them." said Lane Berger, at a hotplate to serve the gooey

a che worm and two cockroaches.
"I think I want another one," he said, giving a thumbs up.

An ice sculpting demonstration outside lustin Hall for the College of Human Ecology drew lunchtime crowds as volunteers took advantage of a barbecue on the front patio of Justin.

Marry Heiman, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said the process of ice sculpting is easy. The artist outlines in the block of ice a scale version of what he or she wishes to create. Then, an outline is cut with a chainsaw, and a handsaw is used to round off the edges.

Heiman and Chris Reedles, senior in hotel and restaurant management, created a basket out of their large block of ice, but Beedles said he has his sight set on other things for next year.

"My goal is to make a giant squirrel for next year," Beedles said.

One of the most popular events at Open House each year is the Miracle Mile, a fund-raising event put on by K-State's greek system. For the Miracle Mile, a milelong chalk line is drawn through the main drag of campus. Passersby are encouraged to place a quarter on the line in an effort to raise money for multiple sclerosis research. This is the fourth year of the Miracle Mile's existence.

Megan Savage, junior in elementary education, member of Pi Beta Phi sorority and chairwoman for the Miracle Mile, said the amount of money raised each year is consistent.

"We usually raise around $3,000," she said, "and a mile of quarters equals $15,000."

Savage said that for every $40 an individual house donates, they get a sign posted along the mile, and for every $70 a business donates, they get their business logo on the back of a Miracle Mile shirt.

Keeping with tradition, Bill Snyder, head football coach, placed several coins inside the chalked likeness of a Powercat. Along with the crowd, Willie the Wildcat was present to cheer him on.

"This event has always been successful. I appreciate the young students who donate their time," he said. "It's hard to find people who are willing to volunteer their time to such a good cause."

With the midday sun reflecting off the piles of quarters, Snyder said he always is honored to be a part of Open House.

"It's a great day to be a college student and to be involved with so many activities," Snyder said.

Love of Wildcat football leads to pride in university, making most out of little time left

When I was younger, my family always went to K-State semesters of being the Wildcat that I always wanted to be football games.

My parents, who are big alumni, would wake my brothers and sister and I up really, really early in the morning and make sure we left town by 7 a.m. so we could drive all the way to Manhattan in time to get a decent parking space and not miss the pregame.

These weekend trips to Manhattan with my family always were the highlight of my

First of all, I loved going to Manhattan. I loved driving around in a town that had numerous stoplights, fast food places and a mall. Where I come from, it is 90 miles to the closest Wal-Mart, so from the depths of nowheresville in western Kansas, Manhattan was the epitome of a thriving metropolis for me. However, even more than the town of Manhattan, I loved going to the football games themselves.

At this point in my life, I had not really developed a strong like of college football, nor did I understand that in the 1980s, I was witnessing perhaps the greatest comeback ever of a DI football team.

None of that mattered to me at that time. The thing I liked most about football games (well, besides the nachos), was the feeling that I got when I sat inside KSU Stadium. It was the first time I remember feeling like a part of a greater whole.

Of course, I had been to high school football games before, but that couldn't even begin to compare. There was something magical about seeing the football team. or even the band, stream onto the football field, clad in purple, bursting with pride. And then the whole crowd would stand up and cheer, making my young ears nearly implode with sound. I loved that feeling. I loved being able to look around, and, as far as my 4 feet, 5 inches could see, I was surrounded by purple and silver, and people who all were pulling for the same thing, a K-State

Moreover, I used to love to look across the stands at the student section and think to myself, "Wow, I am going to be there someday." I looked forward to the day when my older brother and I would be sitting in the stands together with all of our "cool college" friends, doing the Wabash Cannonball or crowd surfing to the top. I knew from the very beginning that I belonged at K-State. It just was a part of who I was.

So, here I am, in my fourth semester at K-State, and, for the most part, loving every minute of it. However, college hasn't been the glorious stream of screaming fans and crazy weekend victories that I had dreamed it would be. There are other things to college, too, that as a child I never considered. Silly things, trifles really, like class, homework, grades, appointments, meetings, rent, bills, jobs, scholarship applications, and, well, numerous other things that just aren't quite as much carefree fun as football games. Matter of fact, for the most part, they are not carefree or fun at all.

And sometimes, especially during the spring semester and since football season is long since over and midterms have taken their proverbial beating, I forget I am at college. I forget I am at K-State. I forget just how long I have looked forward to the years that I would spend here, and I forget what a unique and uncompromising time of my life I am in. I start to take for granted that I am a Wildcat. And it seems like the fall afternoons I spent sitting in the stands with my parents, waiting to transition over to the student side are a little more than a memory of days gone by. I forget how lucky I am to be here at all.

I was experiencing this spring semester lag once again, and the other day I met with my adviser. She informed me that I have less than 50 hours left here at K-State. And I couldn't believe it. At first I was like, "Wow! Just three more semesters left, and I get to graduate early and pack off to grad school (wherever that might be), and finally be done with school."

And then my second thought was, "Wow, that is only three more semesters here in Manhattan. Three more

So, as I have been walking around campus, hanging out with my friends or even studying for tests lately, I have > been doing it with a little more care, a little more appreciation. Because while three semesters still is a pretty long time, it is not forever, the way I once imagined it to be. This time, like every other time in our lives, is merely transitional and fleeting. And just like the seconds tick off the scoreboard, the weeks run down each semester.

So, I hope everyone, as they are enrolling this week or doing whatever it is they need to do in anticipation for next semester, appreciates where they are in life. And I hope those students who are preparing to graduate in May can look back on their time here and not have too many regrets. I know not everyone placed the same kind of expectations on being a student at K-State as I did, but I hope that the expectations you did have, have been met and preceded.

College is a really, really great time in life, and K-State is a really special college to me. At first, it took fall football games to make me believe this, but now I am reminded every time I look around. And I still look forward to the fall weekends when my parents trek across state with tailgating gear in tow. And my adolescent brother and sister look around with the same look of wonderment and excitement that I used to have. The twinkle in my little sister's eye when a crowd of purple walks by is all I need to remind me that I am living in the middle of my biggest dream, and I am really lucky to be in college.

A word to the wise: You don't want to go to war with China. This world has 6 billion people in it, China has one sixth of them. And all one billion of them are ready to die for their country. I think an apology is not too much. Go ahead and say, "I'm sorry."

I was just wondering if it's too much to ask for the state of Kansas to have one section of road between Manhattan and Topeka that is not under construction?

Those "yield to pedestrians" and crosswalk signs are not just there for their beautification.

Great. I was already having trouble talking on Sprint for the weekends. Now we are going to have a whole bunch of drunks calling their DDs over the weekends, and it is going to be even worse.

Okay, when it's 70 degrees at 6 a.m. in the morning, I think it's time to turn on the air conditioning. What do you think, Facilities? Housing? Dining? You guys listening to me? Air conditioning. Please.

All the buildings are hot. It's humid as heck outside. The classrooms are hot. Let's hope that Wefald's air conditioning is off, too. It better be.

Cockroach races in Waters Hall for Open House? Must be entomology or the political science department.

Erin, girl, you rule. Plain and simple.

This is for my neighbors that call me anti-social. I wouldn't be anti-social if you would shut up and leave me the hell alone.

It's official. I now have CTGS. Can't talk to girls syndrome.

To the guy who stole my bookbag out of the library: if you wanted my bookbag that bad, all you had to do was ask. I would have gave it to you.

Someone called in the other day about the KSU toilet paper causing rectal bleeding. I solved that problem by just using the Campus Fourum instead.

Question for Tuesday: How can we keep businesses in Aggleville?

Sometimes victory can be gained by apologizing

Two years ago, right now, we were waiting for the new "Star Wars" movie, and my crispest memory is that it felt like everyone in America was pregnant. Every man, woman and child seemed to be in the third trimester of something that, whether incredible or terrible, would be nothing less than history.

Even our last presidential election, which had the kind of photo finish usually found only at sporting events, left the nation more lukewarm than anxious. So the last "Star Wars" craze is my last vivid remembrance of a collective anticipation.

Two years later, we finally find ourselves holding our breath for something again. This time, however, it's not the movies that has us waiting on the edge of our seats. It's an apology.

As 24 American fliers are being kept in China's custody, they wait with the knowledge that the only thing keeping them from American soil is an official American apology. As of yet, President Bush's only official stance is that the spy plane incident was a genuine tragedy.

Whether Bush is fishing for a war to break in his untested administration like a new pair of shoes is anybody's guess. There are some who believe he's shopping for his own Persian Gulf war to put himself in the history books. Others think, however, Bush is being soft on China, especially after his macho deportation of 50 Russian diplomats a few weeks ago (mainly economic theorists who suggest Bush is owned by corporate interests who helped put him in office, and those corporate interests have much invested in China).

So now we wait. Waiting for an apology feels like we're trapped in an episode of "Friends." One of the friends has done something stupid to piss off one of the other friends and now the whole half hour will be about the remaining four friends trying to get the two to make up so they can all be friends again.

CHRISTOPHER PIATT

Sound familiar? If so, it's not because you watch too much television. It's because the current impasse with China is a massive, overwrought illustration, a relatively simple phobia; nothing is scarier than apologizing.

I don't know if this is an American problem, a Western culture problem or a human problem. I do know, however, that an apology is confession of guilt, and admitting to one's wrongdoing is considered less noble than it is incriminating. Witness, for example, our most recent chief executive. Even though an honest confession of extramarital affairs worked to his advantage in 1992 by making him appear human, he believed telling the truth about personal mistakes in the White House would destroy him. He was never more.

Rather than apologizing in the beginning, he ... well, I'm sure we all remember. His ridiculous public apology demonstrated just how illiterate he was in that form of communication. His subsequent indictment, both official and unofficial, illustrated that it is safer not to confess one's mistakes. In this culture, the greatest crime a human being can commit is being human.

Apologies are regarded as a sign of weakness rather than a mark of character. This attitude is responsible for everything from Aggieville bar fights to international warfare. Stubborn has a higher premium than regretful, which is a crying shame.

Sticking to your guns can make you look more ridiculous than forthright. Suppose student body presidential candidate Rick Wooten had admitted to the charges launched against him by the Collegian rather than indignantly flaunting them. He could have made a laughingstock of the paper that tried to condemn him. Instead, his grassroots campaign appeared flagrant and insulting.

Likewise, the Collegian could have saved face by admitting that running a front page story about pending charges against him on the first day of the election was a silly booby trap rather than timely journalism. Instead, further charges were filed by the paper itself, which then proceeded to offer coverage of its own indictment.

In short, a bunch of smart people ended up looking stupid.

Foreign policy is, of course, a bit more complicated, so it's entirely possible, even probable, that apologizing to China isn't the right move just yet (although the friends and families of the detained 24 might beg to differ). But it serves as a reminder of how impossible it is to get apologies out of anyone for anything.

So, for all the flaky columns I've written this semester, and there have been more than a few, I offer a genuine apology. Sometimes meeting a deadline supersedes good writing, and it's easier to crank out something that requires little accountability. I also apologize for writing a self-referential column, as it's generally a bad idea to write something that draws attention to itself.

There's nothing wrong with being sorry. There's only a problem with not being able to confess to it. Perhaps it's not a problem if you don't mind living in a crucible culture, but if you view someone else's apology as a chance to lay blame, that's exactly what you're perpetuating.

And now we wait for an apology with all the nervous energy of a new blockbuster sequel. Needless to say, let's hope this one has a happy ending. If not, we all might end up sorry.

Local school board members elected

By LUCAS SHIVERS Kansas State Collegian

Three candidates were elected to lead the education effort for the Manhattan/Ogden USD 383 School Board for the next four years.

The newly elected members, Walter Pesaresi, Ilm Shroyer and Dorothy Soldan, will be officially seated at the July meeting.

Mo Hosni, parent and site council member, said the selection included an outstanding array of candidates. The results of the April 3 election were no surprise, he said.

"I was expecting the winners," he said. "My top three choices were elected, and I was very pleased. They will make good additions to the

Hosni said the board will need to work as a team to ease a range of issues, including a drop in student enrollment, budget problems and reacher morale

"The board needs to look at the district problems and the positive points to build on the benefits and work on the deficiencies," Hosni said. They are all very much familiar with the issues. Now, solutions need to come."

Pesaresi, owner of Mr. P's Party Outlet, brings more than 20 years of teaching experience, two children through the USD 383 system and private business owner experience to the board.

Budget and declining enrollment are top issues facing the board, he said. Focusing on enrollment rates, he voiced concern on the reasons behind the decrease

"We need to honestly take a look at enrollment," Pesaresi said. "We have to ask why kids are leaving and do what we can to stop the outflows."

Like any business, Pesaresi said cutting costs of non-classroom items could help bring balance to the budget. To ensure incomes exceed expenses, he said changes are needed.

"Over 1,000 kids have left in the last five years," he said. "We' re not going to need quite as many teachers or administrators. It's not just one group, however, as we're all in this together for the kids."

Pesaresi said looking into state funding equality would be another goal for his term.

"It is our duty to set policy and guidelines and let administrators run schools," Pesaresi said. "We are there to offer support in finding the best possible solutions with the resources we've been given."

As a K-State extension agronomist, Shroyer has been involved in education for 20 years as a teacher, volunteer, classroom speaker and site council member, His four children have attended nine schools in the district.

Topping the list of issues, Shroyer said the strained budget will have foremost importance for the board. He said attention also will be extended to sustain students' interest to keep them active in education.

"We have to keep kids in school and teach them to be contributing members of our society," he said. "We need to give all kids tools to be successful."

In providing resources to students, Shroyer said teachers need to be fairly compensated for their work. He said a balanced ratio of teachers to students needs to be found to accurately assess student performance.

"I would like to get (the district) above the state average for teacher salaries," Shroyer said. "You almost have to be a magician to do some of these things."

In working to find solutions, Shroyer said goals should be focused on promoting the abilities of students.

"The board is a place to express ideas and hash them out in the best interest of the kids," he said. "We have to ask what is good for the students and teachers and fiscally responsible to the community."

The education background of Soldan is seasoned with more than 30 years in the profession. Completing her undergraduate work and doctorate at K-State, she has returned to higher education working as director of economic education programs across the area.

With financial interest, Soldan said the annual budget is one of the largest roles of the board.

"We need to look at our own wants and desires to bring balance to the budget," Soldan said. "We are responsible to the public to make the best use of what we have to give students the best education possible."

In addition to the other concerns. Soldan said she looks forward to working with the new superintendent. There are three candidates vying for the position in the final stages of the selection process.

"I hope the new superintendent will bring leadership skills to the table, with some insight and new perspective," she said. "We need to maintain and extend quality education and facilitate new possibilities to deliver it to our children.

Soldan said the community brings individual concerns to the board, making each term different.

"It is our legal objective to ensure and encourage policy to serve the interest of not only students but also in terms of teachers and administrations to build a professional environment." Soldan said. "We will meet the expectations of the community to provide quality education."

Awareness, importance of freethought goal of group's activities

By SHANNON MARSHALL Kansas State Collegian

Individuals for Freethought will ponsor its first Freethought Awareness Week today through Friday. The organization's goal is to spread awareness of the free thought process and its role regarding issues of faith.

Members of the organization say the freethought process often is misunderstood in society today. Amy Walker, junior in architectural engineering and coordinator of Freethought Awareness Week, said nearly 10 percent of Americans are non-religious.

"We're trying to let people know that we exist," Walker said. She said she describes herself as an atheist or someone who is without God.

"Many people who have these beliefs feel isolated and alone and are afraid to come out to their families and relatives," she said.

The organization's main event for the week will be a presentation by Dan Barker, a former fundamentalist preacher who lost faith after 19 years. He will speak at 7 tonight in the Little Theatre of the K-State Student Union about his journey from preacher to atheist.

Keiv Spare, senior in civil engineering and publicity coordinator for Individuals for Freethought, said he thinks Barker's presentation will be beneficial to those who attend. "He's one of the best people in the world to explain the freethought process because he has a very calm and friendly manner," Spare said.

Spare, who describes himself as a freethinker or someone who believes in the high unlikelihood of God's existence, explained freethought as a process that can be applied to any theory.

"It is the process to how you gain your conclusions, " he said. "It can be used to explain any topic or issue in society."

Walker said the main purpose of Freethought Awareness Week is to educate the public about freethought

"I think the most impurtant thing we want to get out is that people without religion have morals, too, she said. "We are mothers, fathers, students and teachers. We deserve a little

Wildcats lose 3-game series to Cowboys

By MICHAEL HOLL Kansas State Collegian

K-State's baseball team dropped two of three games to Oklahoma State over the weekend.

In the first game of the series Friday, Oklahoma State broke open a 1-1 tie with two runs in the fourth and fifth innings and then added four runs in the eighth inning after K-State closed the score to 7-5. The 11-5 decision was the fifth straight loss for the Cats.

"I am obviously disappointed with the loss," head coach Mike Clark said Friday. "However, I was happy that we battled at the plate and fought back in the top of the eighth when we were down five runs. I was disappointed with our offense because tonight's environment was easily the best hitting environment of the season. The wind was blowing out, and (OSU pitcher Josh) Merrigan didn't have his best stuff. When we did get the offense going and close the gap, our pitching staff let us down."

K-State was led offensively by sophomore outfielder Pat Maloney, who posted a 3-for-4 evening with one run scored. Senior designated hitter Josh Cavender added a 2-for-4 performance along with a run scored and a RBI. Senior second baseman J.D. Loudabarger had a tearn-high 2 RBI on a 1-for-4 night.

Starter Luke Robertson got the loss and dropped his

K-State's fortunes improved greatly Saturday. Led by senior outfielder Kasey Weishaar's two home runs, the Cats knocked off the Cowboys 13-8 and won their first Big 12 Conference road game of the season. K-State's pitching staff, led by starter and winning pitcher Kevin Melcher, also improved upon the previous day's perfor-

"I'm so ecstatic for our guys. We came out and really had some great at-bats," Clark said. "I'm so happy that Kasey came out and had a great day because he has been struggling lately, and this really will help his confidence. I'm really proud of our pitching staff as well, especially Kevin. He struggled a little bit early on, then came out and threw well. Kelvin (Day) got in a little trouble in eighth, but got himself out of it and finished the game off well. This is really an important win for the mentality of our team."

The game started off on a rocky note for the Cats, as outfielder Luke Scott drilled his Big 12-leading 12th home run over the right field wall in the bottom of the first inning, which gave the Cowboys a 3-0 lead. After a scoreless second inning, though, K-State responded with six runs on four hits in the top of the third inning, highlighted by Weishaar's three-run home run over the center field wall. K-State then added four runs in the fourth inning to put the game out of the Cowboys'

Offensively, Weishaar led the Cats with a careerhigh five RBI on 2-for-5 hitting. Cavender added two RBI on 2-for-5 hitting, and Loudabarger posted a 2-for-5 afternoon and a run scored and one RBL

In the rubber game Sunday, both teams put double-digit numbers of runners on base but struggled to score runs, as OSU dropped the Cats, 4-3.

K-State scored first, getting a run in the third inning, but the Cowboys tied it up with a run of their own in the bottom of the inning. Then, in the seventh inning, K-State tied up the game again at 3-3, and the score would remain tied into the bottom of the 10th inning, when OSU outfielder Jimbo McAuliff drove in Roy York from third base on a fielder's choice.

K-State returns to action at 7 tonight against Maryland at Wayne Norvell Field in Manhattan.

Wisconsin beats Wildcats 3-2

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

If improvement is the goal for spring practice, the K-State volleyball team made strides toward that purpose in its exhibition match against Wisconsin on Saturday.

Last December, the Badgers knocked K-State out of the NCAA Tournament with a 3-1 victory. On Saturday, the Cats won the first two games and forced Wisconsin into a fifth game, where K-State eventually fell, 11-15.

"I think they got a little bit better, and we didn't maintain the level of our play, specifically, serving," James McLaughlin, head coach, said. "We came out bombing serves, hitting good jump serves, but we didn't stay on task for the whole match. We played well for two games, but you gotta win three.

"Wisconsin took us out of our game a little bit. I thought on the last three games they won the serve and pass."

Serving was especially important in the match because the new rally-scoring method was used for the first time. In the new system, points are scored on every side-out, which means that the opposing team received a point on serving errors. As a result, each serve gains elevated importance, and despite K-State's struggles at times Saturday, the team is improving in that area, outside hitter Liz Wegner

"We're getting in a rhythm. A lot of people have got a lot of consistency going with their serves," she said. "When it's on, it's nice. It's a lot easier as a blocker and a defender when the serve is going

K-State did show noticeable improvement in its blocking. In the Sweet 16 match last December, Wisconsin's Big Ten Co-Player of the Year, middle blocker Sherisa Livingston, racked up 29 kills on .356 hitting. This time around, however, the Cats were able to defend Livingston better, Wegner said.

"Our blocking's getting a lot better. We didn't block very well the last time we played them. Sherisa, the middle, when we played them up there, she just killed us, and I thought we did a real good job controlling her," Wegner said. "We let their outsides get going a little bit, but we stopped them, slowed them down, and that's what we wanted to work on and get better at, and we're doing that."

On the other hand, K-State struggled at times in transition play - in digging shots off the block, McLaughlin said.

Sophomore middle blocker Lauren Goehring played despite a sore foot. She will sit out of practice Monday and Tuesday to heal. Freshman middle blocker Lisa Martin and sophomore setter Laura Downey, who both redshirted last season, couldn't play due to NCAA rules.

and then converting those opportunities. We need to really spend time doing that," he said. "We are going to do that. We need to get better." Offensively, McLaughlin said he was happy with

"Where we're not better is in our digging and then converting - creating an opportunity to score

how his team played. Despite being tentative at times, K-State achieved its goal of getting increased quick shots from the middle blockers. "After the morning, we had set 32 percent quick, and we wanted to be at 32 percent," McLaughlin said. "We're not killing balls. This was our first competition, and I could tell we were a little bit hesitant, and you can't be that way in this game. You've got to go for it."

Nonetheless, the offense will be fine, Wegner said. It's the defense that needs to improve.

"I think we've really got our offense going, but our defense, doing the little plays, the touches off the block, if we get those plays going, our offense will be better, our defense will be better," Wegner said. "Just overall, we'll be a better team."

Royals games offer entertainment

It's been a rough start of the new baseball season for my Kansas City Royals. Having to open the season with three games in New York against the Yankees is like having 7:30 and 8:30 a.m. classes all week.

The Royals ended up getting broomed by the Yanks before coming home and splitting the first two games in a three-game set with the Twins.

I have seen the Royals picked to finish as high as second in the American League Central, but I don't think that will happen. Until baseball implements some type of revenue-sharing package, we will have to watch Atlanta, Arizona, the New York teams and maybe a few others in the playoffs every year.

However, despite the yearly beatings by the Yankees, Indians and others, I still consider the Royals my favorite sports team, pro or college. I have been attending their games regularly since I was 5. One of my first memories of living in Kansas (after moving from Michigan) is a Royals-Mariners game in 1985, a few weeks before I started kindergarten.

Like most kids, I started going with my dad and brother, then with friends in high school and now in college. I have had friendships begin from a mutual interest in the Royals

I know baseball isn't the popular sport it once was, but I am going to give you three reasons why you should go to a Royals' game this season (and try to save you some cash while doing it!)

1. Kauffman Stadium: In its 29th year, the Royals' ballpark still is one of the best in the major league. Renovations in the late 1990s have kept Kauffman a state-of-the-art facility. This is exceptional because most parks built in the early 70s are now obsolete or not in use (see Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia for an example).

2. Cheap tickets: With box seats still under $20, Royals games are the best buy in professional sports. Plus, every Monday and Thursday home games are half-price games - $11 upper-deck reserved seats point against Wisconsin

what my dad calls the "G.A. sneak." Most people who are reading this and attend Royals games have done this. Simply buy the $7 G.A. ticket and sneak out of the G.A. section and sit

3. Food: With everything from Gates' barbecue to Krispy Kreme doughnuts - everyone can get something they enjoy. It can be kind of pricey, so follow these tips to stretch your ballpark food dollar. First, consider all Royals' games B.Y.O.P. (bring your own peanuts). You might need to pick up a second student loan if you want more than one bag.

Second tip, and this is for the big eater in your group, go to Buck Night. The concept is simple. All hot dogs, small drinks and small bags of peanuts are a buck. They have these once a month, and they always are on a weekend night.

Lastly, if you want to drink, do so in the parking lot before the game. Pick up your brew on the way, as the gas stations in Missouri are like mini-liquor stores. Beer inside the yard will run you about $4.75 or more for a 16-ounce plastic cup.

I hope all of you can make it out to a game this year. They are fun for everybody. One word of warning: Eat and drink in moderation or you might suffer from "Ballpark Kickback," which results from overconsumption of ballpark food and drink.

K-State dominates Missouri 7-3

By DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

Members of the K-State and Missouri golf teams learned first hand the benefits of practicing in unfavorable conditions Sunday afternoon at Colbert Hills Golf Course.

Wind gusts up to 25 mph greeted the Wildcats and Tigers to kick off the second annual Cat Fight, and while the windy conditions did little to damper the competitive fires of the two schools, both teams felt the effects early. K-State junior Bryan Milberger fought the elements and recorded a tournament best score of three over 75 in the first round.

"For the conditions and the way the course was set up with the wind and all, I think I played pretty well," he said. "I gave away some shots on the greens, but it's real hard to putt when the wind's blowing and knocking your ball back and forth and sideways."

Across the board, scores rose in synchrony with rising wind speeds, playing tricks on player's tee shots and putts throughout the day, Milberger said.

"The course is built and designed for the wind, but this is not exactly the kind of wind that it was designed for. It affects how you mentally and physically play the course. It just wears on you because you get tired after a while of not being able to hit normal shots."

While Missouri struggled to find the right combination of adjustments Sunday, K-State's familiarity with the course seemed to give the Cats an edge later in the day. K-State beat the Tigers 7-3 by winning or halving each of five afternoon matchups with the Tigers, but scores hovered around 80 in the second round. Milberger said the Cats' practice schedule and his team's ability to adjust to the breezy conditions were important aspects of the K-State win.

"This course, if you're not comfortable with playing on it when the wind blows, can be intimidating," he said. "I think they might have got a little intimidated by that, and once it starts getting you, it gets hard to bring yourself back."

Head coach Tim Norris was quick to give Colbert Hills

some credit for his team's success as well. On a day that saw wind speed play as big of a part in the contest as the golfers' skills, Norris said he was glad the tournament was on the Cats' home course.

"It's a huge advantage," Norris said. "That's why Colbert Hills was built. It's a tournament golf course. and it can play as tough as any for these guys. Obviously, the more home advantage you ca 'ave, the better."

Bob Stamey has been working with the Red Cross for 10 years as a volunteer. Stamey said he thinks the Red Cross is a great opportunity to help people with minor emergencies like bandaging a cut as well as with more serious emergencies.

Stamey said it is volunteer work that allows him to go places other people don't always get to be, such as football games, but it is not all fun and games.

"People say I love football. I think I will volunteer for the Red Cross at the games.' Well, if you want to watch football, you better buy a ticket because you don't get to watch football when you are working with the Red Cross," Stamey said. "Sometimes you do, but not always."

The tournament, which had a crew of workers on hand for emergencies, also had greeters at the different holes to talk with golfers. Members of the business fraternity Alpha Kappa Psi worked at the tournament and said they enjoyed the experience.

The volunteers, Minor said, made the tournament easier to produce.

"The volunteers have been the most incredible that I have ever worked with," Minor said.

Stamey said this tournament will lend itself to future fund-raisers.

"It is a great start," he said. "The Red Cross receives no government donations, so you have to do things to raise money and awareness."

Rowdy Trouty's closed for a month when the bar lost its license.

An employee of Rowdy Trouty's said the revoked license might have been due to the fact that the bar didn't have a kitchen.

"It happens a lot that we find establishments that have never had a kitchen," Holeman said.

The bar reopened March 30 as a 3.2, or cereal malt beverage bar. O'Malley's Alley has had its share of difficulties as well. When its liquor license expired Feb. 23, ABC denied the renewal. O'Malley's reopened in March under different management.

Another Manhattan establishment has been on diversion since September 1999.

Bammes Retail Liquor Store on North Third Street was on probation due to charges pending against the store, including selling alcohol to minors and giving employees alcohol in lieu of payment.

At a civil hearing Wednesday, the presiding officer found the liquor store guilty of four out of five accounts of selling to minors.

Nancy Bammes, owner of the liquor store, said ABC isn't cooperating with a judge's prior ruling. She said the charges against her store were dismissed because the conditions of the diversion were satisfied for three out of five charges.

"Our understanding is that at least three people from Bammes Liquor Store completed the terms of the diversion, but we were having a civil proceeding yesterday," said Ezra Ginzburg, assistant attorney general for ABC, "The charges against the store were dismissed in criminal court and diversion occurred."

Ginzburg said there are two things that can happen when establishments are faced with charges. The establishment can choose to end up in criminal district court with its case being prosecuted by the county or the city attorney, and ABC can take civil action since it controls the establishment's liquor

Bammes said if ABC has its way, her store will suffer.

"We could be greatly affected by the consequences," she said.

Unreal reality

Depp's versatility, acting ability infuse drug lord's biopic with interest

Kansas State Collegian

With glamour, glitz, drug dealing and the gruesome end it leads to set to 1970s music, "Blow" plays more like a VH1 special than a box-office draw.

George Jung (Johnny Depp. "Legend of Sleepy Hollow") is an all-American boy who ends up pursuing the American dream with a vengeance by becoming one of the country's foremost drug suppliers. Based on the true story of lung's life, the moviemight as well be a VIII special if it weren't for the fact that the movie puts a decidedly overly endearing spin on Jung

Yes, we all are used to Hollywood playing up movies by basing them on true stories, and we know some things are made up so we can enjoy the movie, but this is ridiculous. The reallife Jung is not likely to find sympathy from anyone. The movie makes him look like a nice guy, outlaw entrepreneur. After a little research, it is obvious the guy deserved to be-For instance, in the movie, lung eventually gives up the drug business after being cut out by a partner and doesn't worry about taking any sort of action. In an interview with the reallife Jung, he said he kept distributing independently for the Medellin cartel. and they only called oil any attempt at revenge on his partner after his connection told him it would be a bad idea. Viewed on MOVIE REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN "Blow" at least stays somewhat entertaining. Most of this can be attributed to the excellent cast. Ray Liotta and Rachel Griffiths play lung's parents with dynamism. but the electric performance of Johnny Depp is what keeps the movie from getting old. Depp's unaque ability to inhabit a character breathes life into these supposed chronicles of a big-time drug trafficker. In a movie revolving around a central character, any director would be hard pressed to find an actor more versatile and able to take it on than Depp. His lively performance and presence keep this version of Jung an interesting pusher.

In the end. "Blow" probably will keep your attention. On its own, the movie stays interesting, but it is important to remember this is a fictional version of lung. The movie wouldn't have lost anything by sticking to the truth. The true. meaner, less naive lung could have been every bit as interesting as the movie version.

With more special guests than you probably can fit in Run's house, a more appropriate name for Run DMC's new album, "Crown Royal" might have been "Duets."

Everything but the title track of "Crown Royal" features a diverse cast of special guests that pay tribute to the hip-hop pioneers by lending their skills to the mic. Unfortunately, it comes off as a ploy to sell more copies of the disc instead of being a solid Run DMC album.

It's always painful to see great artists hang onto their act beyond its lifespan, but "Crown Royal" is a sign that it might be time for Run DMC to lace up their Adidases and walk away for good. One sure sign of an aging rapper is when they begin leaning on old school credibility like a crutch. It happened on Dre's "Chronic 2000," and you should be prepared for it on this album.

In "Crown Royal," Run DMC plays the card, sending the message to young rappers, "I'm the reason you started rhymin' / I'm the reason rap sales started climbin' / That's why I'm still headlinin."

To the credit of the album, a few tracks stand out, but don't expect any of them to compete for much air play against the likes of Nelly or Outkast.

With plenty of hip-hop gusto, the group takes on the old standard, "Take the Money and Run." And one of the most stand out tracks features, surprisingly enough, pop star Stephan Jenkins of Third Eye Blind on "Rock Show." The track is another example of Run DMC's uncanny ability to rock a rhyme with distorted guitars and plenty of scratching. Besides picking the album up as a loval fan, others will just be curious to hear how all these artists sound with the hip-hop royalty. So the special guest ploy succeeds somewhat in its seduction value for drawing attention to the album, and with the likes of Kid Rock, Nas and Method Man, yeah, it sounds interesting. That doesn't mean "Crown Royal" deserves to stand alongside classic albums like "King of

Freeman hasn't had a decent acting role for a while, and it is refreshing to see him in his element. Freeman's talent in roles such as this is unmatched, and I'm happy to see him in a movie that is worthy of being a sequel. One of the few qualms I have with this film is that, at times, the plot moves a bit too slowly, but Freeman and Potter's domineering screen presences make it worth the wait. It's hard to believe it took four years to get a sequel to "Kiss the Girls" onto the silver screen, but because of the popularity of the first film. it. too, is worth the wait. Give the film a try, and enjoy a good thriller that is long overdue.

CONGRATULATIONS

Ryan Parks

Ryan Parks is a graduating student in chemical engineering. Leaving the Kansas State University in Jone, Ryan will begin his new career for Archer Daniels Midland Company. Ryan will be working in soybean processing in Lincoln, Nebrasko.

ADM is the world's largest agri-processing company and is based in Decatur, Illinois. ADM is continuing to expand throughout North America as well as in China, Europe and South America.

ADM processes corn, soybeans and other oil seeds and produces high fructose corn, cara syrup, eitric acid, Vitanin C, Vitamin E. TVPO, vegetable oil, lecithin, ethanol, as well as many other products.

Ryan found out about ADM's career opportunities from career services and scheduled an interview with ADM. He interviewed in Decatur, toured production facilities, and was then hired as a production assistant.

Ryan will begin training for period of six to twelve months. During this time he will work with different technicians and engineers as well as learn about the entire process of production at the plant. He wanted the chance to have hands-on experience. Ryan is eagerly awaiting hiss new career at ADM. We look forward to Ryan joining us

Students step into spring

Warm days help students get outdoors; average daily, spring temperatures remain normal.

management, said it was the first of many days they will spend at their spot at the lake.

"If the weather is good, we're here," Bastable said. "This is what we do for leisure.'

The group said they were worried the warm weather wasn't going to come this year. Bastable said although there have been other warm days this year, today was what he considered the first real day of spring.

"We had a couple of nice days that just teased us," Bastable said. "But today was really nice. It was the first day we could come out here without being too cold or too sticky from the humidity:

Mary Knapp, state climatologist, said that although it seems like the warm weather is coming later this year, it's pretty close to being right on schedule.

"For the past four or five years, spring has come earlier than usual, so people have been getting used to early warm weather." Knapp said. "However, on a long-term scale, we're close to normal."

Knapp said what isn't normal for this time of year is the warmer night temperatures. Knapp said normal overnight lows for this time of year are in the 50s.

David Mayes, junior in kinesiology, said he and his friends are hoping the weather is here to stay so they can continue spending their days at the lake. They said their two "Manhattan looks cool from up here," Scoby, junior in mass communications, said. "The football stadium and Tuttle Creek are neat to look at up in the air.'

More than 1,600 feet above Manhattan, Scoby seemed comfortable and in control.

"Flying has always been something I have wanted to do," Scoby said. "Now that I have my pilot's license, I will fly before I drive if I can."

Scoby is one of the many K-State students, faculty and alumni who belong to the K-State Flying Club. The club maintains a 50-percent student membership and teaching members to fly through lowered rates within the club. Scoby said the rates the flying club offered was an incentive for him to get involved.

"The club has great rates for students who want to learn to fly," Scoby said. "It would not have been possible for me to do this without the rates they offer. It would have been out of the question."

Hugh Irvin, K-State Flying Club instructor and flight instructor at K-State-Salina, said he has been involved with the flying club since 1976.

"The club can be very rewarding for people who want to learn to fly for a hobby or for a profession," Irvin said. "If a person is interested in flying, the club is a great organization to get involved with. I am 52 years old and still active in the club."

Scoby said learning to fly was something he

Services planned for Cobb

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas State Collegian

A celebration of life will be given in honor of a K-State student who committed suicide early Friday evening.

A service for Andrew Charles "Drew" Cobb II. sophomore in graphic design, will take place at 6 p.m. Wednesday at All Faiths Chapel. The service will begin with a prayer walk throughout campus, and at 7, participants will return to the chapel to listen to the music of United Black Voices. Friends and acquaintances in attendance are encouraged to share their memories of Cobb during the service as well as speak with his parents and family following the service.

Cobb's funeral services will be at 1 p.m. Friday at Scott's United Methodist Church in Denver, Colo. In addition, K-State will sponsor a memorial service for Cobb sometime in the middle of next week, said Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life. An exact date hasn't been set, but Iones said it will be at 7:30 p.m. next Wednesday or Thursday. The Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, will preside over the services.

Jones said the university is working on university-funded transportation for anyone who wants to go to Cobb's funeral. Anyone who can drive others, or anyone who needs a ride, is encouraged to call the Office of Student Life at 532-6432. They will be placed on a list and paired with those who can drive or those who need a ride. Placement on the list is on a first-come, first-served basis, Jones said.

Cobb was a member of United Black Voices for two years. He is survived by his parents. Andrew and Gena Cobb. of Denver.

Aikman ends career after 12 seasons

By JAIME ARON

The Associated Press

IRVING, Texas - Troy Aikman's NFL career ended with the Dallas Cowboys after all.

The three-time Super Bowl champion announced his retirement at a news conference Monday at Texas Stadium, where he starred for 12 seasons.

"You watch and you think that your time will never come," said Aikman, fighting back tears as he announced his plans. "And my time's come."

Aikman suffered four concussions in his last 20 starts - giving him 10 in his career - and has a degenerative back problem. "I know it's the right thing. I know it's the right thing for me because of my health, concussions, the back problems I've had. It took its toll," he said. Aikman said the competitor in him wanted to continue, but he said his family weighed in his decision. "I think when all things are considered, it

At least 1,400 college students are majoring in "golf" at eight universities with more schools about to start programs, according to a March Wall Street Journal report. One school just completed a $1.1 million student "learning laboratory" (that is, a model golf clubhouse), part of what is necessary to meet the demand for prosas new or expanded U.S. courses open at the rate of about one a day. Curricula include business classes, turf science and many, many rounds of golf.

'Internet twins' taken to Missouri foster home

LONDON - A British couple lost their bid Monday to regain custody of the "Internet Twins"baby girls found through a U.S. online adoption broker, who then became the subject of a trans-Atlantic tug-of-war - with the High Court ruling that the infants should be returned to the United States.

Judith and Alan Kilshaw of Wales had brought the 9-monthold girls to Britain three months ago after paying double the fee of that paid by a California couple who also wanted to adopt them. The twins were placed a few weeks later in the care of social services. where they have remained since.

Justice Andrew Kirkwood ruled that the girls should be returned to the state of Missouri, where the estranged biological parents are seeking custody. In a statement, the judge said the twins would be placed in foster care in Missouri pending rulings there on their future.

Kirkwood said arrangements for and timing of the babies' transfer would be confidential and "carefully planned so as to avoid, so far as possible, any further distress

The court session was punctuated by two separate outbursts outside chambers by Mrs. Kilshaw, who had gained a reputation for eccentric behavior as the custody tussle dragged on.

"There is no justice - they said I lied," she screamed at reporters waiting for word of the decision. She calmed down and re-entered the courtroom but re-emerged a short time later, struggling violently with a court official and yelling: "You are all wrong They are all hars, and I hate them."

Tax cuts might endanger federal program funding

WASHINGTON, D.C. -President Bush targeted scores of federal programs on Monday to make room for his $1.6 trillion tax cut, proposing deep cuts in funds to put more police on the streets, promote energy conservation and train pediatricians at children's hospitals.

"Washington is known for its pork. This budget funds our needs without the fat," Bush told reporters as his administration sent Congress a 2,500-page document filling in the fine print of the $1.96 trillion rudimentary budget he outlined in February.

Democrats balked, saying Bush's proposals would cut bone as well as fat, and noted that the Senate already had repudiated part of Bush's tax plan by trimming it back to $1.2 trillion.

Rep. John Spratt of South Carolina, the senior Democrat on the House Budget Committee, cited bewildering, curious cuts in this budget" and said he doubted Bush could win even GOP support for some of the cuts.

Bush's budget would hold growth in discretionary spending to a 4-percent increase, far below this year's 8.7-percent increase. Mandatory "entitlement" benefit programs such as Social Security, Medicare and veterans' benefits would not be affected.

The president's February outline highlighted spending increases, including big boosts in defense and education spending, Monday's formal submission - consisting of a five-inch stack of blue books was the first detailed look at the proposed cuts.

Bush chooses gay man to direct AIDS policies

WASHINGTON, D.C. President Bush has chosen an openly gay Wisconsin man to direct his administration's policies on AIDS, the White House announced

Bush selected Scott Evertz to head the new Office of National AIDS Policy, said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer. Evertz, leader of the Log Cabin Republicans in Wisconsin, is the first openly gay person nominated to an executive branch office by a Republican presi-

"The president picks the best people for their jobs, regardless of what their backgrounds may or may not be, and that is why he has chosen Scott," Fleischer said. "The president respects him. He will be welcome at this White House."

Evertz is a political ally of Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson, former governor of Wisconsin.

The Human Rights Campaign the country's largest gay political group, praised Evertz' appointment even while it criticized as inadequate the $1.8 billion allotment for AIDS programs in Bush's fiscal 2002 budget proposal.

"We applaud President Bush for this appointment," said Winnie Stachelberg, the group's political director. She also noted that Thompson had expressed a desire to be "personally and directly involved" in AIDS prevention efforts.

Former preacher discusses atheism

Kansas State Collegian

Dan Barker, a preacher-turnedatheist, said he thinks America is not a nation built on religious beliefs.

"The United States was not in any sense founded upon the Christian ideas of religion," Barker said in a speech Monday sponsored by Individuals for Freethought. "The U.S. is not a Christian nation and never has been."

This statement was one of many that the audience met with debate. A member of the audience responded by saying faith is what makes America a special place.

The speech featured debate over Bible verses and the purpose of morality. Barker answered questions on how he told his parents he was an atheist and also explained what fills the gap left by religion.

"I play jazz piano," Barker said. "If you have never played jazz piano, then you do not know what you are missing. Lots of things can take the place."

Another audience member posed the question; if there is no God, then who is to stop someone from beating up a child and taking his or her lollipop?

"If you are not educated enough to know not to beat up little children, then we have laws and other things that keep you from doing that," Barker said.

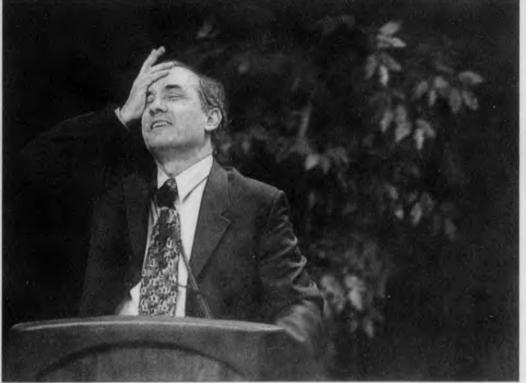

Barker said a person doesn't need to believe in God to have morals, and he also recounted passages in the Bible where Jesus Christ said not to beat some slaves as badly as others.

The statement was typical of those Barker made throughout the night. This led to a spirited discussion of atheism and religion. He works with a group that challenges faithbased initiatives and works to keep separation between church and state.

Barker once believed in the very views he now denounces. At age 16, he joined the ministry and spent years traveling around the country and preaching the word of God.

"I thought I was lucky because I was born into the right family, right time in history," he said. "I never even thought to question it."

 He then began to question these beliefs and study them. Over a five-year period, Barker said he became an atheist, going through the different stages of adopting the belief. Once a fundamentalist, he said his beliefs became more and more liberal before he finally became an atheist.

The change deeply affected his life, Barker said. It led to a failed marriage and eventually caused members of his family to become atheists.

Audience members had mixed responses

"I think it is important to hear what the other view is coming from." Katy Fiddick, sophomore in music education, said. "I think it is important to hear views that you do not necessarily agree with."

Leslie Veesart, sophomore in psychology and vice president of Individuals for Freethought, said the debate touched a nerve with the audience.

"It was an expression of ideas or theology versus philosophy." Veesart said. "Many people get offended because what they believe is being put to the test. They are really uncomfortable with having their position of faith or reasoning challenged."

Students to compete in financial contest

By KECIA N. SEYB

Kansas State Collegian

Three K-State students will present their financial expertise and compete to win scholarship money at the American Express Financial Advisors headquarters in Minneapolis, Minn., April 26-29.

The team of Ryan Walker, junior; Lisa Andres, senior; and James Norton, senior, all students in family financial planning; was selected to represent K-State by competing in the second annual American Express Planning Invitational.

The team will compete to win scholarship money for K-State -$10,000 for first place and $5,000 for second place.

In addition, each student on the winning team will receive a cash prize, and all will have the opportunity to meet with American Express executives.

Sixteen schools were invited this year. Last year, the family financial planning team, which consisted of three different K-State students, earned first place, and this year's team is looking forward to winning again, said Joyce Cantrell, instructor of family studies and human

"We hope we'll defend our title. Even if we don't win, being among the top six is a great honor," Cantrell

In February, the financial planning team received a 94-page, detailed case about a fictitious in Minneapolis, they will be given a variation of the original case profile they created. They then will have three hours to prepare an oral presentation for a panel of industry Walker said that with the variation, the team members will have to be ready for anything.

Since the written part of the team's plan has been completed, the members now are developing a Powerpoint presentation which they are practicing and presenting to classes, Andres said.

The last part of the competition will be the "How Do You Know?" Challenge, which is a gameshowstyle competition that will test the students' knowledge of basic financial planning terms and concepts. The team also is preparing for this phase of the competition.

All of the team members said part of their success in being selected was due to their compatibility.

"I thought we just complemented each other well," Norton said. "Where one of us lagged, the other two picked up."

They all have their different skills, Walker said, which is what makes them good.

Norton and Walker said they agreed that Andres excels in spread sheets," Andres said. Norton works to motivate the team, Andres said. She has needed this push sometimes, she said, as she is very nervous for the competition. "James brings confidence like no other," she said. "Sometimes I'd be like, 'I don't know, guys.' James would say. 'We're going to go to Minneapolis.' He keeps us going." Walker will contribute in the presentation area with his speaking skills and his focus, Andres said. "He likes to speak, and he keeps James and I on track."

Fort Hays State University in Hays, Kan., was one of the six schools selected to compete.

Joining Fort Hays State and K-State in the competition will be Cal-State Fullerton; Minnesota State University, Mankato; Western Carolina State University; and University of North Texas.

Cantrell said she thinks the three K-State students will be successful in the competition, as students in her program always have been.

"I just think we have the best students in the United States," she said. "I always have loved the students in our program, and this just reaffirms that."

How can we keep businesses in Aggieville?

That's an easy one, make them all bars.

Lower the drinking age to 18, and that would double the business.

We all need to drink and go shopping. It is obviously our responsibility as a good citizen.

The consensus from K-State students in Prague for keeping businesses in Aggieville. Number one, open a casino. Number two, have beer cheaper than water. Number three, encourage PDAs. Number four, abolish the drinking age. By the way, do you know how much it costs to call the Fourum from Prague? It's expensive.

The key here would be getting businesses that aren't looking to screw students over. Some of the prices in Aggieville stores are outrageous. It's kind of the same reason why there has always been the same stores on Poyntz. Nobody shops there because there are other places in town where the prices are much lower. It seems like these businesses are so apathetic that they don't care if they get your business or not.

How do you keep Aggieville thriving? Well, for goodness' sake, quit taking away liquor licenses. I mean, come on, get rid of that ridiculous food requirement.

Simple. Stop shopping at Wal-Mart.

Open a dance club. Some people like to do other things than just drink beer at clubs. How about a little dancing?

BUSH LIES WORLD LOSES

Presidential actions fall short of compassionate behavior

The following is some commentary on a few current

1) As the debate starts to heat up over allowing oil exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, what many fail to understand is that regardless of the true amount of oil under ANWR, the cleanliness and efficiency of oil production or its effect on nature, drilling and moving the oil out will irreparably sully the land.

Just as no one would dream of drilling for oil under the Gettysburg Battlefield or Arlington National Cemetery, our natural history is as equally important as our national history. Theodore Roosevelt understood this. That's why he established the national park system. Don't be looking for Bush's likeness on Mount Rushmore anytime soon.

2) While on the topic of the environment, I find it very interesting that many conservative columnists like David Gergen and John Leo have been writing pieces criticizing this administration's environmental policy global warming is not "just another example of the politically correct agenda of the left." He likened the "no consensus on warming" crowd to the tobacco lobby when they argued that there was no established link between smoking and lung cancer.

Leo also pointed out that in polls, two-thirds of all Americans helieve that we need to protect the environment regardless of cost. In addition, a survey of likely Republican voters found as much support for protecting the environment (92.8 percent) as for encouraging family values (93.4) percent). This is just another confirmation of my claim that the White House just doesn't get it.

3) After a review of the 64,248 presidential ballots from all of Florida's 67 counties, it turns out that if the counting proceeded under the lenient standards advocated by Al Gore, Bush's margin of victory would have tripled to 1,665 votes. If the counting proceeded under the very strict standards advocated by Bush. Gore would have won by three votes.

presidential election came from former president Jimmy Carter. His Carter Center monitors elections in emerging democracies. Before they'll monitor an election, they require some minimal standards.

As far as U.S. elections are concerned, Carter said, "We would not dream of going into a country that had election laws like ours. where there is such a vast chasm in some central nonpartisan or bipartisan agency deciding on election arguments ... where every precinct, every voting place can have a separate kind of voting mechanism, and where the interpretation of what is a good vote or a had vote depends, almost exclusively, on local officials' prejudices."

6) Bush's $1.6 trillion tax cut was conceived in 1999 when the economy was still humming along and based on the 10-year projections from the Congressional Budget Office. Even the CBO economists admit that these numbers are crap, In 1997, the CBO's 4-year projection predicted a $36 billion deficit for 2001. Now it's projected to be surplus of $281 billion. At best, they can only make an18-month projection with only a reasonable amount of error. They only make the 10-year projections because Congress orders them to.

7) Bush's $1.6 trillion tax cut is not only unequable as far as who gets the money (half goes to the wealthiest 5 percent, a third to the top I percent), but it's also unequable geographically too. These wealthiest 5 percent live in exclusive communities in and around the nation's largest urban center, not around here. Bush says that these tax cuts are necessary to give the economy a boost, but I don't think Bill Snyder can do enough shopping with his tax return to revitalize Manhattan's downtown.

8) When Bush campaigned that he would be the environmental president, that wasn't the only thing about which he lied. He welfare recipients have strict work requirements. As a result, the list of people waiting for subsidized childcare is very long.

In order to pay for his $1.6 trillion tax cut for the rich, Bush intends to propose a $200 > million cut for childcare grants. Bush also intends to cut $15.7 million for programs dealing with child abuse and entirely to eliminate the early learning fund to improve the quality of education and childcare for children under 5. Preliminary decisions at the White House Office of Management and Budget seek deep cuts in the $235 million program to train doctors at children's hospitals.

For a person who claims that Jesus is his favorite philosopher. Bush's actions don't seem very Christian. He's probably lying about that, too.

Homecoming pairings hurt greek system

Last Thursday, something really disturbing happened in the Manhattan City Park.

No, I'm not talking about your roommate's sudden, violent and unexpected ejection of all the alcohol he consumed that evening. Although that would be kind of gross ... but I digress. I'm talking about the greek system's new concession to democracy: random pairings for Homecoming Week.

As someone whose only experience with the greek system consists of the consumption of massive numbers of gyros (mmm gyros), I may not be fully qualified to comment on the significance of the new random pairings. Of course, if you're going to use those standards, I'm unqualified to comment on anything. So, where was I? Ah,

Ever since the early days of Greece (circa A.D. 1967), followers of the Greek way of life have had a reputation for being wise, open-minded and extremely fond of wearing togas and imbibing vats of adult beverage. These attributes have carried over into the greek system at K-State, except that some of our houses claim to be dry. Ha ha. Just kidding. Seriously, the greek system at K-State has a great history of helping people and being a good influence on campus as well as in the community. For years, it has represented brotherhood (and sisterhood) as well as a concern for mankind. It is also one of our society's last, vanishing bastions of elitism.

Let me clarify that last sentence. When I use the term "elitist," I'm not trying to insult anyone. Neither am I in any way trying to detract from the good things the greek system does or the wonderful ideals for which it stands. I'm just trying to tell it like it is. The greek system is exclusive, and each house seeks to have the best possible group of members. Accepting only the best is called "elitism. The summer before I came to

K-State, I received no fewer than seven HAWKINSON brochures from various fraterni> ties, all of which claimed to be "The Right Choice For My Future At K-State." In each of these brochures, the primary selling point was excellence not egalitarian principles. Let's face it - no one wants to be part of a house that lets in any yahoo off the streets.

> Actually, one of the main reasons for the greek system's effectiveness in the community is its exclusive nature. The fact that only a small number of the very best can be greeks contributes to the sense of community and purpose. If everyone were greek, what would be the point of having fraternities and sororities? As Gilbert and Sullivan pointed out, "If everybody's somebody, then no one's anybody.'

Without organizations that strive for excellence and are comprised of only the best, most talented people, our society would probably become a tepid, stagnant sea of mediocrity. At least, that's the traditional logic behind the greek system.

What disturbs me about the new system for selecting Homecoming partners is the fact that it discourages proactive decision making. Moreover, it takes a little bit of the strength out of the greek system. How on earth could an elitist system benefit from the injection of democratic principles?

Darwin tells us that, without competition, even the fittest grow weak and lazy. What will this new lack of competition for Homecoming partners do to the strength, integrity and vitality of the greek system? Will democratization bolster or weaken greek society?

Today, it's random selection of Homecoming partners among greek houses. Tomorrow, it might be random selection of pledges from a pool of all incoming freshmen. Where will this madness end? I can already hear the massive symbolic bells of doom starting to ring out a dirge for neo-Hellenic society. The end is near, folks.

The situation with random pairings is indicative of our whole society's mindset of blind democracy at any cost. Unless we stop this trend toward egalitarianism in every aspect of society, we one day will be forced to watch helplessly as our once-proud nation explodes into a fireball of mediocrity.

If anybody's interested in watching it happen from the front porch of my house. I think we'll be making popcorn.

U.S. relations with China could suffer

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - President

Bush cautioned Monday that the spy plane standoff might not end soon diplomacy takes time - and warned China that relations with the United States could suffer.

As the nine-day showdown threatened to become a political problem for Bush, U.S. diplomats met for a fourth time with the crew of a crippled EP-3E surveillance plane. The 21 men and three women were doing fine, the president reported, and administration officials said negotiations for their release were progressing Nonetheless, Beijing insisted anew Monday that Washington apologize and take responsibility for the spy plane's March 31 collision with a Chinese fighter jet. The White House said neither demand was warranted.

"Diplomacy takes time," Bush told reporters before a Cabinet meeting about his plans for the federal budget. "But there is a point — the longer it goes - there's a point at which our relations with China could become damaged."

Bush, who has issued similar warnings to Beijing before, broke new ground with the diplomacy-takestime formulation. Advisers said it was a plea for patience aimed at conservatives who ratcheted up their anti-China rhetoric over the weekend and began to question his handling of the situation.

The president also hoped to prepare the public for the possibility of protracted negotiations. Polls show voters support Bush's performance on China, but senior Republicans close to him said the good will could evaporate if the standoff continues much longer.

Bush himself set high expectations a week ago Tuesday when he told China, "it is time for our servicemen and women to return home" and again Friday when he reported. "we're making progress" in negotiations.

Many of his own advisers had said they believed the 24-member crew would be released over the weekend. Instead, China increased its hard-line rhetoric "In consultations, the Chinese side has emphasized that the entire responsibility for this incident rests with the U.S. side," the state-run Xinhua News Agency said, citing China's Foreign Ministry.

Bush has refused to apologize, though he expressed regret Friday for pilot. Similar sentiments were contained in a weekend letter from Bush to the pilot's widow, officials said.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said Sunday the administration was sorry. for the pilot's loss, and Bush has expressed regret - the closest the United States has come to an apology. China gave no direct reaction to Powell's statement Monday.

American diplomats were seeking a way to express regret to the satisfac tion of China without an outright apology. The United States also has proposed having a commission determine the cause of the crash.

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said U.S. diplomats were at a sensitive morneni and were exchanging papers and ideas with their Chinese counterparts.

A senior administration official, briefed on the talles, said negotiations were moving closer to a way to release the crew, but progress was coming at a frustratingly slow pace.

It is hard to gauge when or how a resolution will come, several officials said, because the picture is clouded by the split between political and military leaders in Beijing. "We're working behind the diplomatic channel open. We're in discussions with the Chinese. It is now time for our troops to come home so that our relationship does not become damaged."

He carefully measured his words, twice repeating the warning to Beijing while skating past reporters questions about his options.

The president was not specific about potential harm to U.S.-Chinese relations, but his advisors noted for a second straight day that support for continuing normal trade relations with China was eroding in Congress.

They said the standoff also could affect the U.S. position on selling sophisticated destroyers to Chinese rival Taiwan, the luture of U.S. military exchanges with Bening, Bush's scheduled trip to Beijing this fall and the administration's position on China hosting the 2008 Olympic Games.

Several lawmakers have canceled trips to China because of the dispute. Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., chairman of the House International Relations Committee. said Sunday the crew members are hostages - a word avoided by the White House to avoid inflaming

The touring photograph exhibit "Over 30: Portraits of Unmarried Women" challenges stereotypes about the role of women in society.

«Barbara Columbo, a Colorado artist, made a series of black and white photographs portraying single women who are more than 30 years old. Every picture is accompanied by a few quotes giving an individual's perspective on the issue.

· "Through this work I have gained tremendous inspiration from these women, and even if I never marry, I am certainly not alone," the quate below Columbo's picture says.

The K-State Women's Center is sponsoring the exhibit, which is on display in the Jobby of First Bank on Poyntz

All American women grew up with the myth that there is one true love in a lifetime, said Susan Allen, Women's Center director. Statistics show, though, that approximately 25 percent of women in America have never been married

People treat single women as a problem to be solved. Allen said. She said it is just the choice they have made: The exhibit serves as a way to raise the issue in a positive way. Allen said.

"The exhibit sparks up the lobby and gives it some character," said Debi Urbanek, administrative officer at First Urbanek said she finds the women's eyes the most striking part of the photo.

"The artist really captured their eyes, and they brought out their inner selves," Urbanek said.

These women challenge popular viewpoints by telling their life stories.

"I have been judged as a single parent," a quote by Columbo brought up the necessity for more choices and kinds of housing during the discussion, Allen said.

"We currently have either big apartment complexes or small houses," Allen said. "We do not think of the variations in between. We are just learning to recognize and appreciate diversity in the culture.

Tennis team defeats 2 Big 12 opponents

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's tennis team won its fourth and fifth consecutive matches with Big 12 wins over Missouri and Kansas over the weekend.

On Saturday, No. 44 K-State swept the doubles and won four singles matches in straight sets to defeat Missouri 5-2 and claim its fourth consecutive match, a season high.

The lopsided score isn't an indication of the quality of Missouri's team, though, head coach Steve Bietau said.

"Missouri has improved vastly over a year ago," he said. "That showed in their ability to take advantage wherever we weren't playing well. It was tougher than the 5-2 score

In singles play, sophomore Petra Sedlmajerova defeated Urska Juric to win her fourth straight match. Similarly, senior Eva-Novotna' continued her recent string of wins. She defeated Caitlin Thompson at No. 3 singles to earn her fifth-straight victory. Novotna', along with junior Alena Jecminkova, also helped seal the No. 1 doubles match.

"We had good singles play when we needed it," Bietau said. "Eva just played great singles and doubles. For her and Alena, it was one of the best matches they've played all year.'

On Sunday, K-State defeated No. 48 Kansas for the second consecutive year after losing the previous 34 matches. As in the Missouri match, the 5-2 score belied the difficulty of the victory.

The Cats won the top four singles, but only Jecminkova, who defeated No. 94 Monica Sekulov, won in straight sets. The other three singles' wins required three games, including Novotna's victory over Courtney Steinbock.

In Novotna's case, winning that third game required regaining the composure used in the

"The first set was really quick, and I had the momentum going," Novotna' said. "But she took over in the second. In the third, I just went back to how I played in the first and got back in control to put away the match."

The story was nearly the same for the doubles' matches, which K-State swept.

"I thought this team showed a tremendous amount of composure and poise during doubles," Bietau said. "No. 1 and No. 2 doubles were very tight, but we were in control all the way at No. 3."

With the wins, K-State improved to 10-6 overall and 6-1 in Big 12 play. The Cats will face Oklahoma and Oklahoma State next weekend.

K-State found a way to win Monday night. Despite stranding 11 baserunners in nine long innings of baseball against the University of Maryland, the Cats (13-20, 4-14) were able to come through in the clutch at Wayne Norvell Field, recording an 11-8 win over the Terrapins (10-20, 2-9) in the first contest of a two-game series

"It's just one of those things where pitchers are making really good pitches right now," K-State head coach Mike Clark said of the Cats' struggles with runners on base.

"I'm not going to complain, because if we leave 11 and score 11 every time, we'll win a lot of ball games."

Overall, though, Clark said he was content with the way his team competed at the plate in the Cats' first outing since dropping a heartbreaker to Oklahoma State on Sunday, where K-State stranded 14 in a 10-inning, 4-3 loss,

"Offensively, the guys took advantage of a couple of things and just kept building after that," Clark said.

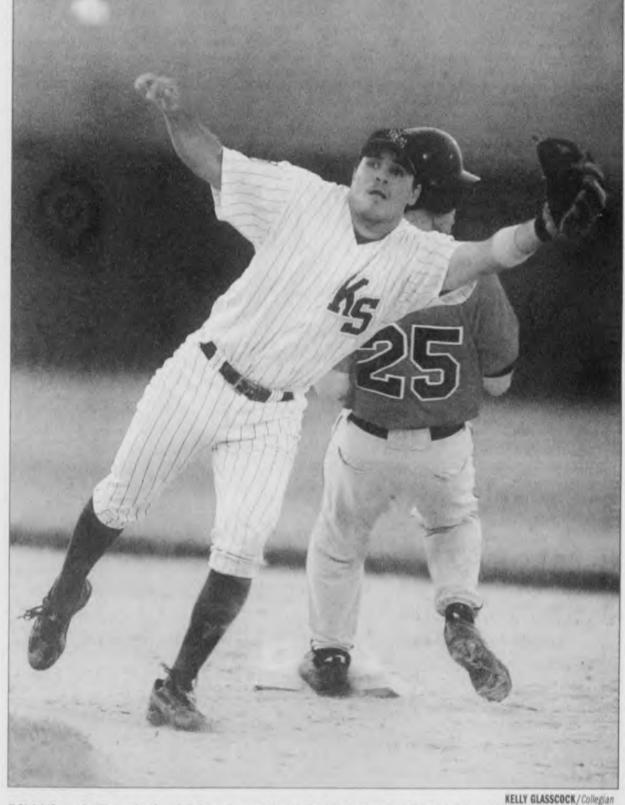

Sparked by a Pat Maloney double to left field that plated Nick Scelfo, Osmar Castillo and B.J. Crone, K-State used a six-run fourth to take an 8-5 lead into the fifth inning. However, lared Brite's fourth start of the year was a rocky one, allowing Maryland several opportunities in the opening innings to stage a comeback effort.

Though Clark's plan was for the freshman to occupy the mound for longer than four innings, Brite allowed seven earned runs off eight Terrapin hits before giving way to sophomore Spencer Black in the fifth.

"We didn't have a lot of pitchers that were ready to go tonight." Clark said. "It was important for lared to get innings, but he was wild, so we had to go to the bullpen earlier than we would have liked."

Black came on to stifle the Maryland attack. part of a near-perfect five-inning, five-strikeout effort that kept the Terrapins at arm's reach for most of the game's closing innings.

off, or he'll really kick our butts.' Eldrick "Tiger" Woods, winner of the aforementioned four majors over the last 294 days, isn't saying much at all.

You could call his accomplishment "Susan," and he wouldn't care. By winning his fourth straight major at the Master's on Sunday, he walked away with the single greatest accomplishment ever attained in the history of his sport. Period.

Let the guy enjoy his success.

And don't push him, or he'll go out and win the next three majors, and send David Duval home with a string of second place

And in the process, he made us all fans. What can he do for an encore, win the Nobel Peace Prize?

Think about it. Every time a kid swings a club, he dreams of being Tiger. These kids aren't mimicking Mark O'Meara. As nice as he is, no one is pretending to be Phil Mickelson. Budding golfers don't want to grow up and be middle-aged, white and only mildly athletic.

If Vijay Singh won four majors in a row. it wouldn't be front-page news. We'd read about it, but we wouldn't dream about it. We don't relish in Tiger's slam because we have a sense for the history of the game. We do it because we have enough sense to watch brilliance in the making.

LeAnn Ledgerwood, senior in kinesiology and flying club member, said she is working toward her flying license, For her, being able to fly a plane will fulfill a goal she has had for a while.

"I have been very interested in learning to fly, so I inquired with the club," she said. "I am just going to do it for pleasure, but the club is a great way for people who are interested in flying as a career to get involved."

Scoby said he was pondering his major and career options when he joined the flying club. He said that at that point, he wanted to see if flying was something he would want to do professionally.

"When I got started, I wasn't sure about my major," Scoby said. "I wanted to get a feel for it and see if I liked it. Now that I have done it for a while. I think it is just something I want to keep as a hobby."

Another bright spot for the Cats on Monday night was the performances of Maloney and Ty Soto.

Maloney, who hit ,385 in Stillwater, Colo., against the Cowboys, found more life in his bat, extending his hit streak to five games with the rally-starting double in the fourth inning and a leadoff single in the sixth.

"I was kind of struggling, but I went out and just relaxed. Het my hands do the work tonight, and I just got the bat on the ball," he said.

Soto, one of several K-State newcomers affecting the team, was perfect from the plate, going 3-for-3 during the night.

°I got my opportunity, and I felt comfortable at the plate," Soto said. "We need to be more aggressive and come out and swing the bat. I felt like the whole team played together tonight, worked well and battled for the win."

WHO: Ryan McCoy, student actor

Ryan McCoy, sophomore in secondary education, plays the part of Kenny, a troubled 17-year old, in the comedy, "Fuddy Meers," opening Friday at the Purple Masque Theatre

McCoy has been involved in acting since his freshman year at Topeka West High School, where he was a member of the Topeka West High School Players. Mccoy said he plans to use his theater experience in his teaching after he graduates and would like to teach high school drama and direct productions.

The people involved in the program make the work worthwhile, McCoy said. Since the plays are open to outside majors he said a variety of people with different backgrounds make the

Being given the opportunity to entertain an audience is a unique experience, McCoy said.

Being able to entertain a hundred people at a time by doing something onstage with the audience looking on is a weird feeling," he said. "Having the audience interact with the performance is a feeling you can't get anywhere else."

Crafted from fine silver, the curvy eyebrow jewelry in Tim Howard's piercing is no standard 16-gauge barbell. He custom crafted it for himself from fine silver, and it is just one piece of the artist's smaller scale work.

Howard, president of the K-State Metalsmithing Society, recently has been working on pieces more than 6. feet long made of brass and steel wool. The variety of scales available to work with in metal is part of what keeps him interested in the art form, Howard, senior in metalsmithing said. a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday with it." can be picked up 10

Tm finally able to express myself the way I want to," he said. "I like metal. I like the way it looks, the way it feels, and I like working The. functionality of the art also attracts him, Howard said. since a great deal of emphasis is placed on jewelry and other pieces that can be used or worn. A goblet, a flatware set and several ashtrays are some of the things

Howard said he has made and used. His background explains his interest in utili-Twas originally an engineering major," he said. "I found out that wasn't really for me, so I tried architecture, where I met a friend of a friend who was and loved it, so this is what I'm doing." The smaller scale available in metalsmithing is what attracted Maria Hammaker, vice president of the K-State in metalsmithing. I tried the Metals I class

Metalsmithing Society. Hammaker, senior in sculpture, said crafting small pieces from silver is very appealing after working on a larger scale in sculpting for so long. In crafting jewelry, Hammaker said it becomes obvious who makes what pieces because personal style shows through in the "Smithing is about using imagination to let your style come out," she said. That's what's great about jewelry - the style is reflected in the work."

An event that left Hammaker temporarily disillusioned about sculpture led her to try working with the smaller scale of smithing, she said.

"I had a huge tree that took about a year to make," she said. "It was 8 feet tall and made out of bailing wire. We left it in the cage in West Stadium to weather because someone was going to buy it for their yard.

"When we came back, it was gone. It took so long to make and it was my favorite piece, so I was very distraught Then I decided I wanted to work with a smaller scale that didn't take so long to complete."

Sterling silver spiders and flies are spread out for her village of smaller versions of trees like the one that was stolen. Hammaker said she is proud of the trees and has already had offers to purchase them.

An opportunity for others to purchase products crafted by metalsmithing students will take place at the fifth-annual Repair Days on Friday. Saturday and Sunday at the Manhattan Art Center's Annex. The Metalsmithing Society will sponsor the event, and Howard said people can bring jewelry and other metal products to be repaired for a donation as well as purchase student art. We usually get stuff brought in like spoons eaten by garbage disposals, and we re-tin copper cookware," he said. "We even had one guy bring in a wooden camel saddle to fix a copper cap in it."

The money raised from the event is used for things such as bringing in guest artists and taking trips to conventions where the students can learn more about the craft, Howard said. The guest artist appearing at this year's Repair Days is Tom Madden, a chairperson for the Metalsmithing and Jewelry at the Center for Creative Studies in Detroit, Mich.

Madden, a K-State graduate, will lecture at 9 a.m. Thursday at the Mariana Kistler Beach Museum of Art on his work. Howard said Madden is most recognized for his works with pewter, which melts at a low enough temperature that it can be manipulated by soldering it to itself.

Since August, Howard has been the president of the Metalsmithing Society. and he said it exists to give metalsmithing students a supportive environment in which to learn and expand their abilities. To join, Howard said it isn't required that students be in metalsmithing. They only need to talk to Howard, or Ellion Pujol, professor of art. and pay the $5 fee each semester.

The society provides a place for interaction and exchange of ideas between artists for Stanley Thornton, treasurer of the K-State Metalsmithing Society. Thornton said he has worked with most-mediums in art, and metal is by far

"When I first wern into the class, I thought I wasn't going to like it," he said. "But the more I worked with metals, the more Creatized it was something Loudd consider doing as a career."

Hammaker said the environment in the society is non-competitive with plenty of encouragement.

"In a lot of my art classes there seemed to be a competition, and I hate that," she said. "Up here in metalsmithing, everyone is very supportive of each other.

KELLY GLASSCOCK / Collegian

Tim Howard, president of the K-State Metalsmithing Society and senior in metalsmithing, cuts pieces of metal Saturday afternoon in Willard Hall. The society will sponsor the fifth-annual Repair Days this weekend at the Manhattan Art Center's Annex.

American Airlines acquires assets, begins merging with TWA

By MATT CURRY The Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas -American Airlines on Monday completed the acquisition of most of the assets of Trans World Airlines.

"Today we celebrate a true milestone for the employees and customers of both American Airlines and TWA," said Donald J. Carty. chairman and CEO of American Airlines. "The combination marks the beginning of a new era in aviation as we bring together some of the most valuable assets and some of the best people in the industry.

The combined company will offer travel to more than 300 cities worldwide on more than 900 aircraft.

The airlines will operate independently for now, with separate reservation systems, payrolls, aircraft and policies. It was not immediately clear how long the transition period would last. Following the transition. TWA will be integrated fully into American's operations.

"Gradually, over the span of several months, American will begin the extremely complicated task of merging work forces and working through all the other issues associated in joining two service companies in a dynamic industry, American spokesman John Hotard

Robert W. Baker, vice chairman of American Airlines, was named chief executive officer of TWA L.L.C., the new wholly owned subsidiary of American, Former TWA president and CEO William F. Compton will serve as president.

"I have known and admired American's management team for many years, and I look forward to working with them to build a prosperous future for American Airlines," Compton said.

A federal appeals court cleared the way Monday for the sale, denying a last-minute bid by a group of Israeli TWA workers to stop the

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia had issued a temporary stay over the weekend in response to a petition from the Jewish Labor Federation.

The labor federation, which represents about 100 Israeli TWA employees and retirees, wanted the appeals court to send the case back to federal bankruptcy court for further consideration, said Bruce Zabarauskas, the lawyer representing the workers

But U.S. Circuit Judge Samuel Alito lifted the stay Monday without giving a reason in his written decision.

Fort Worth, Texas-based AMR Corp.'s deal to pay $742 million for the airline, plus the assumption of $3.5 billion in debt, does not include funds for TWA's unsecured creditors.

The Israeli workers are unsecured creditors owed about $18 million in salaries and benefits, Zabarauskas said.

TWA last month indefinitely suspended its route between Tel Aviv, Israel, and New York's IFK Airport, saying it would not be part of the deal.
